INTRODUCTION.

Isaiah Thomas, the son of Moses and Fidelity Grant Thomas, was born in Boston, 19 January, 1749, old style. It is the family tradition that he was descended from Evan Thomas, of whom Governor Winthrop says:—"On the 5th of June, 1632, arrived in Boston the ship William and Francis, Mr. Thomas master, with about fifty passengers—whereof Mr. Welde and old Mr. Batehelor (being aged 71) were with their families and many other honest men." Evan Thomas settled in the colony of the Massachusetts Bay in 1639 or 1640, the earliest notice of him on the colony records being under the date of 1 September, 1640, when he "having a wife and four children, is allowed twenty bushels of corne at harvest." He was a successful vintner, paying a yearly license, or his proportion of the "rents of wine" of from twenty to forty pounds a year. He also seems to have dabbled in speculation.

His grandson, Peter, the eldest son of George and Rebecca Thomas, was born in Boston, 1 February, 1682. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. George Burroughs, who was hung at Salem for witchcraft, for no other reason apparently, than that he was of small size and great strength. As a merchant in Boston he was prosperous, owning a store on the town doek. Moses, the fourth son of Peter, a shiftless adventurer, succeeded in nothing he attempted and was finally disinherited by his father after many attempts to reform him and set him up in business. He died in 1752, before his father, but the latter's will was not changed, and his widow was left in destitute circumstances, with the care of her three youngest children. She had business ability, and, with the aid of friends, opened a small shop, sending her children into the country to board. She finally saved enough to purchase a small estate in Cambridge, which she eventually lost by selling it for a large price in continental currency.

In 1755, her youngest son, Isaiah, was brought back to Boston, and placed with Zechariah Fowle, a printer of ballads and small books; and 4 June, 1756, was apprenticed to him. Mr. Thomas always charged that Fowle, having gotten him into his power, compelled him to perform all sorts of menial work, in utter disregard of the terms of the indenture. His first trial at typesetting was upon a licentious ballad, "The Lawyers Pedigree," when he was seven years old, and so small that, in order to reach the type-boxes, he was placed on a bench eighteen inches high. This he finished in two days, "though he knew then only the letters and had not been taught to put them together and spell." Several years later, he cut plates on wood or type-metal to illustrate Fowle's ballads. During the ten or eleven years of his apprenticeship, he had acquired the elementary branches of learning, and at the age of seventeen was considered an excellent workman. He loved the art of printing, and his great desire was to go to England to perfect himself in it.

In 1765, on account of trouble with his master, Thomas left Boston secretly and went to Halifax, hoping to find his way from there to London. But the means were wanting. He found employment with Anthony Henry, the government printer, and publisher of the "Halifax Gazette." The latter, an indolent man who knew nothing of printing, let Thomas take things into his own hands, and he became virtually the editor of the paper. It was at the time of the Stamp Act, and his notions of liberty soon got him into trouble. Seditious articles began to appear in the "Gazette." One day the year's stock of stamped paper for the "Gazette" was received from England. It was soon found that the stamps had been removed, and the next issue contained a notice, that "all the stamped paper had been used, and as no more could be had, the paper would in future be published without stamps." A few days later the "Pennsylvania Journal" arrived, in full mourning for the passage of the Stamp Act. Thomas wished to copy it for the "Gazette," but he did not dare to do it directly. As near an imitation as was possible was made of the Journal containing this notice: "We are desired by a number of our readers to give a description of the extraordinary appearance of the 'Pennsylvania Journal' of the 30th of October last. We can in no better way comply with their request than by the exemplification we have given of that 'Journal' in this day's 'Gazette.'" In one issue, death's heads were inserted in place of the stamps; in another the devil was represented in the act of thrusting his fork into the stamp.

Both Henry and Thomas were several times summoned before the governor and council; but warnings and threats had no effect. Henry soon saw that he must part with his journeyman or give up the government business, and Thomas, after between six and seven months' residence in Halifax, went to Portsmouth, N. H.

Mr. Thomas' own narrative of his life in Portsmouth has disappeared, but we have a glimpse of it in the following notice from the "Portsmouth Journal," which was copied in the Boston Courier, 13 April, 1846:—

[From the Portsmouth Journal.]

RELIC OF ISAIAH THOMAS, THE HISTORIAN.

The past week, the old building belonging to Mr. Supply Ham, next east of the Franklin House in this town, has been remodeled. In taking up the chamber floor a quantity of type was found, which indicate that the room had, some long time ago, been used for a printing office. On removing the casing of one of the windows, on the top of the frame a marble covered memorandum book was found, covered with dust, brown with age, and some of the leaves decayed. On opening, appeared these words:

"Isaiah Thomas His Book 1766."

On examination it proves to be the pocket memorandum of the apprentice boy, kept by him from the time he left Boston, to the time he was at work in this building with Furber & Russell. It is probable that he had laid it over the window out of sight behind the casement, that it was forgotten and has there quietly rested for eighty years. Being an earlier production than any on record of this distinguished American historian of that art which is the preservative of all arts, as a matter of curiosity we copy all the record he makes for the six months, from the time of his hegrira to his return to this town.

"Left Mr. Fowle the 19th of September 1765, and sat sail the next Day about 10 o'clock for Halifax, and arrived there on the 24th Day about 10 o'clock, which was just four Days from the Time I left Boston.

Went to Mr. Henry's and engaged work with him for 3 Dollars per month and he to find me Boarding, Washing, &c. Work extremely scarce.

Received of Mr. Anthony Henry the following Articles, viz.

1 Pair of Broadcloth Breeches	0 15 0
Two pair of Stockings	7 0
1 pair of Shoes	8 0
Two Check Shirts	16 0
1 Pistereen	1 0
1 Bottle of—,[this line, at the foot of a page, is obliterated.]	1 0
Two Dollars in Cash	10 0
To 1 yard of Black Shallon	4 0
To 1 yard of Blue Ditto	3 9

Halifax Currency 3 5 9

Work'd with Mr. Henry 5 months, 3 Weeks and 3 Days. Sailed from Halifax the 19th day of March, 1766, and arrived at Old York the 27th (at Dark) of said Month.

Work with Mr. Fowle of Portsmouth 13 Days.

Friday, April 10, 1766. Came to work with Messrs. Furber & Russell for eight Dollars per month and my Board.

Received of Messrs. Furber & Russell 5 yards & half of Black Serge at 9 Shillings Lawful money per yard 2 9 6."

The appearance of the paper on which he worked disclosed his presence in Portsmouth to his Boston friends, and at the invitation of Fowle he returned, but remained only a short time. Notwithstanding his youth, he wished to set up for himself in business, and hearing that there was an opening for a printer in Wilmington, N. C., he went there. This amounted to nothing, and he next went to Charleston, N. C., where he remained until the spring of 1770.

He returned to Boston, and in partnership with Fowle, 17 July of that year, issued, from their office in Salem street, the first number of the "Massachusetts Spy," which was distributed gratuitously. The size of the paper was 8 by 12 inches, and it was published three times a week.

twice on a quarter sheet and once on a half. Three months later, Mr. Thomas bought Fowle's interest, moved his office to School street, and changed the publication to twice a week, each on a half sheet. After continuing it in this form for three months longer, he discontinued it and prepared for the publication of a larger newspaper than had been printed in Boston before. This appeared 7 March, 1771, from his new office on Union street. It started with less than two hundred subscribers, but the number rapidly increased after the first week. In two years it had the largest circulation of any paper in Boston.

The "Spy" soon became a power in the Massachusetts Bay, and some of the ablest writers in the colony contributed to its columns. Its bold and defiant tone drew widespread attention to the printer; and while the paper was being burned by the common hangman in North Carolina, and Mr. Thomas burned in effigy, applications came from the whigs in all parts of the country, to set up presses.

The hostility of the loyalists toward him was extreme; he was frequently threatened with violence, his name was placed on the list of the suspected, and his office was known as the "sedition factory." He was one of the most patriotic of the Sons of Liberty; meetings were often held in his office, and he worked far into the night printing handbills to be posted throughout the town before morning. So frequent did the threats against him become, that a few days before the Battle of Lexington, his friends insisted on his keeping in retirement; and he went to Concord to consult with Hancock and the leading members of the Provincial Congress.

In 1774 the Whigs of Worcester had urged Mr. Thomas to start a paper there. He consented to do so early in 1775, and in February had issued a proposal for publishing "The Worcester Gazette; or American Oracle of Liberty." Though he had not intended to give up his Boston press, the early outbreak of hostilities rendered this necessary.

He went back to Boston, packed up his presses and types, and on the 16th of April, with the aid of Gen. Joseph Warren and Colonel Timothy Bigelow, "stole them out of town in the dead of night," and sent them ahead to Worcester. He remained behind, assisted in giving the alarm on the night of the 18th, and was actively engaged in the fight on the following day.

He arrived in Worcester on the 20th, and set up his press in the cellar of Colonel Bigelow's house. After a suspension of three weeks, the "Spy" reappeared in Worcester, May 3rd, 1775. Here he also did all the printing for the Provincial Congress, until presses were set up in Cambridge and Watertown. Upon the pamphlet, "A Narrative of the Excursions and Ravages of the King's Troops under the Command of General Gage, on the nineteenth of April, 1775," etc., printed by order of the Provincial Congress, is a note in his own handwriting: "This was the first printing done in Worcester, Mass."

We have no connected record of Mr. Thomas' life during the Revolution. In the latter part of 1774, with William Goddard of Baltimore, John Holt of New York, and Thaddeus Burr of Fairfield, Conn., he had established a line of post-riders from Boston to Baltimore. In May, 1775, on the establishment of a temporary system of post-riders and post offices by the Provincial Congress, he was appointed postmaster at Worcester; in the fall of that year, when a regular post office department for all the colonies was created, Franklin again selected him and his successors renewed the commission until he was removed by Jefferson in 1802.

In 1776 and 1777 he leased the "Spy" and went to Salem, intending to start in business there; but financial difficulties prevented this. During these two years his family were living in Londonderry, N. H., but his own movements are unknown, with the exception that, while on a visit to Worcester, in July, 1776, he read the Declaration of Independence from the top of the porch of the Old South Church.* In the spring of 1778, Mr. Thomas resumed the publication of the "Spy," which came out in a new form.

Though the disordered state of the country when he returned made it a hard time to begin business anew, he gained ground slowly but surely. The circulation of the "Spy" was extended, and he did a little job printing. After the peace of 1783, his business rapidly increased. The "Spy" appeared in new type and on better paper, and was enlarged to five columns; besides the news, it published the whole of Robertson's History of America, Gordon's History of the Revolution, and other British publications, which made it more valuable than any other paper in Massachusetts. From March, 1786, to March, 1788, on account of a stamp duty on newspapers, it was changed to magazine form and called the "Worcester Magazine."†

He built a large paper-mill at Quinsigamond in 1793 (the second in the county), and established an extensive bindery. With his partners he controlled sixteen presses, constantly employed, seven of them in Worcester. He had five book-stores in Massachusetts, one in Concord, N. H., one in Albany, and one in Baltimore. In 1788 he established a printing and bookselling business with Ebenezer T. Andrews, at the sign of Faust's head, in Newbury street, Boston, which continued until 1822; but his principal

* The first time the Declaration of Independence was read in Massachusetts was at Worcester by Isaiah Thomas, Esq., who is now living, and participated in the late celebration. It was read from the top of the Portico of the S. Meeting-house—"New England Palladium," Boston, July 7, 1826.

A bronze tablet in front of the City Hall now marks this spot.

† The other newspapers and magazines published by Mr. Thomas were: "The Essex Gazette," at Newburyport in 1773; the "Royal American Magazine," in January, 1774; the "Farmer's Museum," at Walpole, N. H., in 1793; the "Farmer's Journal," at Brookfield, Mass., in 1799; and the firm of Thomas & Andrews published the "Massachusetts Magazine," from 1783 to 1795, illustrated with engravings, which was very popular, and had a wide circulation. The last year he was in Boston he published "Thomas' New England Almanac, or the Massachusetts Calendar for the year of our Lord Christ 1775." This he continued to publish until 1803.

establishment remained in Worcester. At the "Worcester Book-store" he always had a large stock of the publications of the day, and the lists as published in his catalogues and in the "Spy" would make no inconsiderable showing at the present time. For instance, in the "Spy" of March 3rd, 1785, he publishes a list containing fifty-five works on divinity; fifteen on medicine; eleven of history, biography, geography and travels; thirty-one of novels, miscellanies and poetry; twenty-six classical and school-books; and six dictionaries.

He became one of the largest publishers of his time on either side of the Atlantic. His work, remarkable for its elegance and accuracy, caused Brissot de Warville, the famous Girondist leader, to write of him in his travels in the United States in 1788: "Thomas is le Didot des Etats-Unis;" and Franklin spoke of him as the Baskerville of America.

Some idea of the extent of his publications may be gained from Dr. Charles Lemuel Nichols' recent "Bibliography of Worcester," which gives nearly three hundred titles of books and pamphlets bearing his Worcester imprint alone. Among these the most important, perhaps, are the folio edition of the Bible (1791), which contains fifty copper plates and which, with the quarto edition, was carried through in a little more than twelve months; the "Laus Deo! The Worcester Collection of Sacred Harmony" (1786), upon a copy of which Christopher Columbus Baldwin has written: "I believe this is the first specimen of music printed from types in this country. Before this it had been engraved;" and "Perry's Royal Standard English Dictionary," of which Mr. Thomas states in his dedication, "the first work of the kind printed in America."

In 1802 he relinquished his business in Worcester to his son, Isaiah Thomas, Jr. He retired to private life, and devoted his time to the realization of two designs, which he had planned for many years: "A History of Printing in America" and the founding of the American Antiquarian Society.

Mr. Thomas died 4 April, 1831, at the age of eighty-two, and was buried in the plain but massive tomb he had built in the Mechanics street burying-ground. When this burying-ground was removed, in 1878, the tomb was rebuilt in the Rural Cemetery, and his remains were placed there with Masonic ceremonies, in the presence of the members of the family, of the city government, and of the American Antiquarian Society.

In his personal appearance, Mr. Thomas is described by his contemporaries as being tall, slender and well formed, stooping slightly in his gait; courteous and frank in conversation, but somewhat conventional; singularly precise and studied in his dress, and fashionable to a fault. In his later years, he wore a blue broadcloth coat, lined with red, and small clothes.

After he built his mansion, he lived in some state, and entertained with great liberality. He was the first in Worcester to keep a carriage, and had a colored coachman in livery. Many of his journeys were made with his own coach and four.

When Mr. Thomas first came to Worcester, he is said to have lived in a small, one-story, red house, on the southerly side of Pleasant street, nearly on the site of High, known as the Fullerton-Warden house, which was removed when the latter street was opened.

A short time after the Revolution, he built his house on Court Hill, which was afterward his home. It stood but a short distance back from the street, with a high and, for the time, quite an elaborate fence before it. On the north, was a small, square, one-story building, once his printing office, which he used for his counting room and business office, after his retirement. It was later occupied by his coachman; and about the year 1838, was bought by the Proprietors of Rural Cemetery, and, with the addition of a French roof, still stands opposite the cemetery grounds, where it is occupied by the superintendent. Between this building and the Court House, a little lane led up the hill to some cottages, which seemed to belong to Mr. Thomas' estate, as did also the house which still stands, much altered, back of the Unitarian Church. To the south of the house, where the church now stands, was the "Spy" printing office, a long, low building. All of these buildings were painted yellow. At that time there was a middle road between Court Hill and Main street, and two flights of wooden steps led to the street before the house.

Judge Thomas' advertisement for the sale of the estate, in March, 1835, says:—"This estate is beautifully and conveniently located, and has upon it a good Mansion-house, stables, and other out-buildings. There are connected with it an excellent garden and orchard. The front upon Main street is two hundred feet, giving on both sides of the mansion house excellent house lots."

Entering the house through the small front porch, which is still preserved in its original position, one came into a long, narrow entry (for it was not large enough to be called a hall), just wide enough for the door to be opened. Directly in front was the staircase, running around three walls. This had two landings, and its balustrades and pillars were elaborately carved. Back of the stairway, and nearly in the centre of the house, was the chimney, immense, even for those days, in which several people could sit with perfect ease. The room leading from the right was a parlor, square furnished with wainscoting and cornice, and with window seats built into each of the three windows. The walls of this room were hung with cordovan leather, painted in landscape, and fastened at the top and bottom. The ceiling was painted sky blue, with silver stars, and with a large ostrich egg in the centre.

Beyond the parlor, entered through a small porch in front of the north wing of the house, was a long, narrow room, which was probably Mr. Thomas' library, the western end of the room being filled with arched shelves. For eight years, until Mr. Thomas built and gave to the society its hall on Summer street, this room served as the first home for the collection of the American Antiquarian Society.

Behind the parlor was the dining-room, and directly back of the chimney was the kitchen with its enormous oven and fireplace. To the left of the hall was another parlor, similar to the one on the right.

Mr. Thomas kept his diary in his interleaved almanacs, which are bound and in the library of the society. It covers the period from January, 1805 to December, 1828, inclusive, with the exception of the year 1808, in which there are no entries. The fact that it ends on the day before that of Christopher Columbus Baldwin's begins, and that there is a marked similarity in the character of the entries, would seem to indicate that it had been planned between them that the one should be the continuation of the other. But Mr. Thomas' interests were far more widespread than those of Mr. Baldwin, and his entries not so closely confined to mere local matters.

Unfortunately it does not cover the period of his business life, of which we know comparatively little. The only entries in the earlier almanacs are these short ones:—

1796.

- May 3. Went a journey to Hartford, Newyork, Philadelphia and Baltimore.
- July 1. Returned from Baltimore.
- Oct. 11. Went a journey to Northfield and constituted Harmony Lodge and installed the Master, Solomon Vose, Esq<sup>r</sup>, the 18th delivered Charge, &c in publick.
- 14. Went to Walpole & returned the 17th—19th went to Boston with Mrs. Thomas.

1797.

Printed 29,000 Almanacks for this year.

- 2<sup>d</sup> Aug<sup>t</sup>. proposed Installation at Monson. I consecrated and installed at Monson.
- 9th Thomas Lodge and Installation at Groton.

- Sept. 27. Went to Boston.
- 28. Went to Newburyport. R Arch with Mrs. Thomas.
- Oct. 2. Returned to Boston.
- 5. do to Worcester.

But in a way the period covered by the diary is more important than that preceding. It was the time of internal improvements, and of the awakening of the manufacturing and industrial interests of New England. In many of these Mr. Thomas took an active part, and their inception and development are given in some detail. Among them are the Boston and Worcester Turnpike, of which he was one of the first directors and, I think, the only one outside of Boston. He was also one of the incorporators and for eleven years a director of the Worcester Bank, then the only banking institution between Boston and Pittsfield; and one of the original members of the Second Parish, and always active in its affairs.

Mr. Thomas was prominent as a Mason, was the founder of Morning Star Lodge, in Worcester, and its first master. For two terms he was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. He describes many of their ceremonies and festivals, and among them two of especial interest;—the laying of the corner-stone of the Massachusetts General Hospital, in 1818, and that of Bunker Hill Monument, by Lafayette, in 1825.

But perhaps the most interesting feature is the picture it gives of his own social and domestic life; his narrative of local affairs, forming the only connected record of such events which we possess; his boundless hospitality, and the people whom he entertained and met; his connection with the various societies to which he belonged; his frequent journeys in the New England states; and those minor details which went to make up his daily existence.

Upon the marriage of Charles in 1796, Samuel removed to another farm of several hundred acres, which they owned at the north end of the village, which included the site of the old gas works on Lincoln street, and extended east on both sides of Belmont street to Bell Pond, and south as far as the Insane Hospital. Upon this farm was his father's old mansion-house, which still stands on the easterly side of Lincoln square, a little north of its original position. The farmhouse which he built for himself at this time, and occupied until his death in 1813, was later a part of the house of Edward Earle. The two brothers were partners as merchants in English and West India goods, and were large manufacturers of pearl and pot ashes, not only in Worcester, but in various towns in Vermont and Canada, where they also had large stores for general merchandise.

[Born, Worcester, 25 February, 1757. Died, Woodstock, 26 October, 1813.]

<sup>3</sup> Isaiah Thomas, Jr., the only son of Mr. Thomas, after receiving his education in the schools of Boston and Worcester, entered into business with his father in Worcester, and succeeded him in 1802. He had a publishing house on Court Hill where the Unitarian Church now stands, while his bookstore and house were on the opposite side of the street. From 1802 to 1809 he was the publisher of the Massachusetts Spy. In the latter year he removed his business to Boston, having his store on Cornhill and branches in various places. He was an extensive publisher and carried on a successful business until the war of 1812, when he met with losses from which he never fully recovered.

In 1797 he married Mary, daughter of Edward Weld, of Boston, by whom he had twelve children, six sons and six daughters.

[Born, Boston, 5 September, 1773.

<sup>1</sup> In February, 1805, a petition was presented to the General Court by Aaron Davis and one hundred and forty-five others, stating "that the great road or highway leading from Boston to Worcester is extremely crooked, hilly and in many places, narrow and inconvenient—that the present and most direct way from Boston is through Cambridge, Watertown, Waltham, Westown, Sudbury, Marlborough, Northborough and Shrewsbury, into Worcester; whereas, after a careful view and survey of the true situation, and course, to Worcester, the most direct and nearest way will be found to be by opening a road from the Southerly part of Boston, through Roxbury, Brooklyn, Newton, Needham, Natick, Framingham, Southborough, Westborough, and the southerly corner of Shrewsbury, into Worcester;—that by a road in this direction your Petitioners verily believe a saving between eight and ten miles in the distance between Boston and Worcester might be made; that this route would be pursued mostly over very level ground, and would avoid the very many and difficult hills which are a great impediment to the travel on the old road." The petition also stated that a like saving might be made on the roads from Worcester to Hartford and towards Pittsfield and Albany, and asked for an act of incorporation for a turnpike road "in such a direction as near a straight line to Western Bridge as your Honors in your wisdom shall deem fit, and to grant them such reasonable toll thereon as shall be thought adequate and proper for such an undertaking."

A similar petition was presented at the same time by Asa Nickols and forty-three others. 9 March, Hugh M'Clallen, William Ely and Moses Brown were appointed a legislative committee to view the respective routes, or any others as the most direct route from Boston to Western Bridge, at the expense of the petitioners, to hear the parties and report their opinion whether any turnpike road was necessary and expedient, and if any, which route would best accommodate the public.

port, being a fellow student of his classmate Rufus King. He was admitted to the bar in 1780, and for a short time practiced with William Stearns in Worcester, and in 1805 formed a partnership with William E. Green. From 1802 to 1811 he represented Worcester in the General Court, and was County Attorney from 1807 to 1811, when he was made an associate Justice of the Circuit Court of Common Pleas for the Western Circuit, an office which he held until his death. While in college he fought with the college company on the nineteenth of April, 1775, and later, during Shays's Rebellion he joined General Lincoln's army as a volunteer, and during this campaign the exposure and hardships he was compelled to endure so impaired his health that he never fully recovered.

"At a meeting of a Number of Gentlemen at Barker's tavern (Exchange Hotel) in Worcester, 18 December, 1803—

"Isaiah Thomas, Esqr. being chosen Moderator,—

"Voted, That it is the sense of the Gentlemen present that it would be advantageous to the County of Worcester to have a Bank established at Worcester."

Benjamin Heywood, Francis Blake, Isaiah Thomas, Dr. William Paine and Daniel Waldo, Jr., were appointed a Committee to superintend the subscriptions, prepare a petition to the General Court, etc.; and on 21 December, it was announced in the Massachusetts Spy and the National Aegis under the heading "A Country Bank" that "an association of gentlemen belonging to the town of Worcester, having contemplated the advantages which would accrue to the agricultural, commercial and mechanical interests of the county from the establishment of a bank in the town of Worcester," had appointed a committee to invite subscriptions from the citizens of the county, and that books would be opened at Mr. Barker's tavern in Worcester on the first Tuesday in January. The response to this call was so liberal that one hundred and eighty-three subscribers applied for a total of two thousand, six hundred and twelve shares. These were reduced to fifteen hundred and the capital stock was fixed at $150,000.00 instead of $100,000.00 as was at first contemplated.

On 3 January, 1804, Daniel Waldo, Jr., Isaiah Thomas and Francis Blake were appointed to present a petition to the General Court for an act of incorporation, and on 7 March, the charter was granted:—"An Act to incorporate Daniel Waldo and others by the name and stile of the President, Directors & Company of the WORCESTER BANK." The other corporators were Daniel Waldo, Sr., Stephen Salisbury, Nathan Patch, William Henshaw, Nathaniel Paine and Elijah Burbank. At the first meeting of the stockholders, 10 April, Daniel Waldo, Benjamin Heywood, Samuel Flagg, Isaiah Thomas, Daniel Waldo, Jr., Theophilus Wheeler and Samuel Chandler were elected directors. Daniel Waldo was the first president, but was succeeded by his son in the following October. The first cashier was Levi Thaxter. At the same meeting Dr. William Paine, Samuel Brazer, Ephraim Mower, Dr. Oliver Fiske and John Farrar were appointed a committee "to enquire where a spot can be had for a Banking house, and exhibit a plan for a suitable Building, with an estimate for the expence, and report the same at the adjournment." Acting upon the recommendation of this committee, on 20 April, it was "Voted 1st. That the Lot of Land belonging to Capt. Danl. Heywood opposite to land owned by Nathaniel Paine, Esq<sup>r</sup>. situate on the maine street in Worcester, stated to contain one hundred and twenty-six rods, a plan of which was presented by the Committee, be purchased by the President & Directors for the Corporation at the price and upon the terms proposed by said Heywood to the Committee.

"Voted 2<sup>d</sup>. That the Directors be hereby authorized and directed to build a house of Brick, that will accommodate a Family & answer for banking purposes; to be of such a form and size as they may judge to be most for the Interest of the Stockholders, conforming however to the outline of the plan exhibited by the Committee so far as may consist with convenience; the same to be erected in the Lot of Land to be purchased of Capt. Daniel Heywood."

The Directors decided that the building should be of brick, three stories high, with two belts of marble in the front; and Mr. Thomas was appointed to apply to Charles Bulfinch for drafts of the interior and exterior and to obtain of a brick-layer in Boston a calculation of the quantity of bricks and lime which would be wanted; he was also empowered to procure the marble provided that the expense did not exceed one dollar per foot. Before the completion of this building the directors met at the Exchange Hotel [known both as "Barker's Tavern," and

"Rice's Inn, at the sign of the Golden Ball,") at Heywood's Tavern [the Central Hotel], and at Daniel Waldo's store.

The new building was first used for a meeting of the directors 6 October, 1804.

The Massachusetts Spy of 12 February, 1806, contained the advertisement that there was "To be leased and entered upon the first of April next—That Superb Brick Edifice connected with the Bank in Worcester.—This elegant building is three stories high and contains two Kitchens, two Parlors, and thirteen Chambers, with a handsome Piazza the whole extent of one wing. A convenient Woodhouse, including a well and other necessary appendages connected with it. It is accommodated with a well finished Barn, sufficiently large both for a Carriage house and for Stabling;—also with land sufficient for a spacious Yard and Kitchen Garden.

"This seat is calculated either for the Gentleman, who wishes to retire to the country to enjoy his fortune, or for the man of business, whose object is to increase it in a flourishing town, second to none on the continent, of an inland situation, for its enterprize, industry and growth. From the size and central situation of this building, it is also extremely well calculated for a Hotel, or genteel Boarding-house." This was occupied by Daniel Waldo, Jr., until he built his mansion to the south of the bank, on the site of Mechanics Hall. The north part of the first floor was afterwards used as the Post-office.

The building was occupied by the bank until its destruction by fire 6 March, 1843.

[Born, Worcester, 9 June, 1765.

<sup>3</sup> In April, 1793, Mr. Thomas formed a partnership with David Carlisle, Jr., a former apprentice in Worcester, and opened a printing office and bookstore in Walpole, N. H., Mr. Thomas furnishing the press, types and a large stock of books, while Carlisle had the general management of the business. In the same month they began the publication of The New Hampshire Journal, which had a good literary standing from the beginning, and which soon had a large circulation in New Hampshire and in the towns of Vermont, opposite Walpole, on the Connecticut River. At the beginning of the second year the title of the paper was changed to The New Hampshire and Vermont Journal, or Farmers Weekly Museum; and in 1795, Joseph Dennie, later the sole editor of the paper and subsequently of the Portfolio, in Philadelphia, began to write a series of letters called "The Lay Preacher," which were republished in nearly all the newspapers of the country. These letters, with contributions from other well known writers of the time, gave the paper such a prominent position that its subscription list was larger than that of any other in the interior of the country. Its circulation extended from Maine to Georgia, and an

In the spring of 1796 Mr. Thomas retired from the firm, and Carlisle became nominally the sole proprietor of the paper. In April, 1797, the title was again changed to The Farmers Weekly Museum: New Hampshire and Vermont Journal; but in less than a year Carlisle's financial embarrassments compelled him to flee to Canada, and the paper again fell into the hands of Mr. Thomas, the business being conducted by Alexander Thomas. In October, 1801, it was temporarily disposed of to David Newhall, under whose management its size was reduced. Two years later Thomas & Thomas again resumed its publication, and in 1804 it was again enlarged and its second title dropped; but with the loss of its correspondents the spirit of the paper was gone and it had nothing to distinguish it from many others in New England. In March, 1807, its publication was suspended, but was again revived in October, 1808, by Thomas & Thomas and Cheever Feleh, and in the following July, the latter became the sole publisher and editor.— See entry and note 14 September, 1809.

On each side of the doors, above the pannels, it is quite open, and to guard against bad weather there are curtains, which are made to let down from the roof, and fasten to buttons placed for the purpose on the outside. There is also a leathern curtain to hang occasionally between the driver and passengers."

Mr. Thomas generally made his journeys in New England in his own carriage, and often with coach and four. He is said to have been the first person in Worcester to have a colored coachman in livery.

<sup>1</sup> "A Chariot or Half-COACH is a kind of coach that has only a seat behind, with a stool, at most, before. When these are very gay, richly garnished, and have five glasses, they are called CALASHES."—Rees' Cyclopaedia.

Alice Morse Earle in her "Stage Coach and Tavern Days" describes the chariot of John Brown, the founder of Brown University, in which Washington went from place to place when he visited Rhode Island in 1790, and which is still preserved on the family estate in Warwick, R. I.

The body, which resembles somewhat that of a modern coupé, is suspended on heavy thorough-braces, attached to heavy iron holders as large as a man's wrist, the forward ones so curved as to allow the forward wheels to pass under them, in order that the chariot may be turned within a short compass. The wheels are heavy, the hind ones twice the height of the forward ones, the tires of which are attached to the felloes in several distinct pieces.

<sup>1</sup> Daniel Waldo, the son of Daniel and Rebecca Salisbury Waldo, on coming of age, was taken into partnership by his father, the firm being known as D. Waldo and Son. After the retirement of his father in 1791, he greatly extended the business and increased his importations, supplying in a great measure this part of the country and the adjoining states with foreign goods. He was a merchant in Worcester for nearly thirty years, and in 1813 had a hardware store in Boston, probably for a short time only, as his name appears in the directory for that year alone.

With the exception of being a member of the Hartford Convention in 1814, and of the State Senate from 1816<sup>o</sup> to 1819 Mr. Waldo held no public office; but he was identified with nearly all the local institutions. He was president of the Worcester Bank for forty-one years; of the Worcester County Institution for Savings from its incorporation in 1828 until his death; and of the Worcester Agricultural Society from 1820 to 1824. Central Church was built and given to that Society by him, and in 1838 he gave the land for Rural Cemetery.

Mr. Waldo was never married. He lived from 1806 to 1828 in the Worcester Bank Building, and in the latter year he built the large mansion to the south of the bank, where Mechanics Hall now stands, where he lived with his maiden sisters until his death.

<sup>1</sup> Ebenezer Turell Andrews, the son of William and Mary Andrews of Boston, was apprenticed to Mr. Thomas 18 July, 1781. He lived in the family, as was customary at that time, and in 1788 was taken into partnership by him. He married for his first wife Hermione, daughter of Edward Weld, of Boston, who died in 1807, and soon afterwards he married her sister Elizabeth. At the time of his first marriage, he lived in Deming's court (now Avon place); and later over the store of Thomas and Andrews in Newbury street, in the house adjoining it, in the house at the corner of Washington street and Central court, and about the year 1825 he moved to 15 Winter street.

He practiced in Groton, Mass., until 1806, when he removed to Medford and opened an office in Boston, where he soon acquired a prominent position in the profession.

From 1792 to 1797, he represented Groton in the General Court; was Senator for the four succeeding years and Councillor in 1802; for eighteen years from 1804 he was again a member of the House, and was for eleven years its Speaker. In 1814 he was a delegate to the Hartford Convention.

<sup>1</sup> This was the first building built for the Academy. The old Lopez house and store which had been occupied since its foundation in 1784 soon proved inadequate for its needs, and as early as 1786, measures were taken to rebuild. But financial embarrassment caused by the effects of the war and the depreciation of the currency rendered this out of the question at that time. In 1793, however, the state granted to it a township of land in Maine, and two years later a lottery was established for its benefit. With these aids, and with additional private gifts, in 1804 the trustees felt themselves justified in beginning the new building, and on 14 May, 1805, the corner-stone was laid.

At its dedication, Rev. Aaron Bancroft delivered an address upon the importance and influence of education.

Mr. Thomas was one of the earliest patrons of the Academy, and left to it a legacy which amounted to more than five thousand dollars.

<sup>1</sup> This tragedy grew out of a political quarrel between the famous Boston lawyer, Benjamin Austin, the father of the victim, and Thomas Oliver Selfridge, then a partner of Lemuel Shaw, who was just beginning his professional life. It caused the greatest excitement in Boston, at a time when party feeling ran very high, and the day was long afterwards known as "Bloody Monday." The trial of Selfridge for manslaughter, before Judge Parker, was one of the most noted which ever occurred in Boston. James Sullivan, Attorney General, and Daniel Davis, Solicitor General, appeared for the prosecution; and Samuel Dexter, Christopher Gore, Harrison Gray Otis and Charles Jackson were counsel for the defence.

The defence claimed that Charles Austin, a Harvard student, eighteen years of age, had espoused his father's side, and that as he saw Selfridge crossing State street, near the old State House, advanced rapidly towards him in a threatening manner and began striking him on the head; and that, because of his inferior strength and size he was unable to defend himself, he drew his pistol and shot his assailant dead.

The verdict was "not guilty," but it is impossible to say how far it was affected by the political opinions of the jurors. Thomas Handasyd Perkins was the foreman of the grand jury which found the indictment, and Paul Revere was the foreman of the petit jury which rendered the verdict.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. John Green, the second, the son of John and Mary Ruggles Green, studied medicine with his father, and at the age of eighteen began his professional life in Worcester, which covered a period of twenty-seven years, for the last nine of which he was practically the only physician in the town. He was particularly skilled in surgery and built up a large practice which extended far into the country.

Dr. Green married Nancy, daughter of James Barber, of Worcester, by whom he had eleven children, of whom the eldest was Dr. John Green, the founder of the Free Public Library in Worcester. He lived first in his father's little wooden office, and afterwards built the house next south, opposite the head of the present Central street, which was later occupied by his son. He died suddenly at the age of forty-five. "To his funeral," says the Massachusetts Spy of 17 August, 1808, "came the largest concourse of people from this and neighboring towns ever known to be collected here on a similar occasion."

Governor Lincoln in his "Fire Society Reminiscences," says of him: "Dr. Green, like others of his family, had his amusing but harmless peculiarities. He would often be followed, in his queer looking two-wheeled vehicle, by a pack of Dogs; or, superb horseman as he was, be seen on the backs of all manner of ungainly, half-broken Colts, at full gallop, accompanied by the Pack giving mouth as if a score of Huntsmen were at their heels, to the infinite delight of all the urchins in the village."

[Born, Worcester, 18 March, 1763.

Died, Worcester, 11 August, 1808.]

<sup>3</sup> Oliver Fiske, the son of Rev. Nathan Fiske, of Brookfield, received his early education at home, and in 1780, at the age of eighteen, enlisted in the Continental army. At the end of his term of service he was employed on his father's farm, and entered Harvard in 1783.

When Shays's Rebellion broke out three years later he was instrumental in reorganizing the Marti-Mercurian Band of the University and in obtaining an order from Governor Bowdoin for sixty stands of arms from Castle William. He was first-lieutenant of the company and bore its petition to the court, then sitting in Concord, for permission to march with the government army, but the college authorities declined to allow it. When Shays appeared in Worcester he was teaching school in Lincoln, during the winter vacation, and procuring a substitute he hastened there and joined General Lincoln's army in its march to Petersham.

After his graduation in 1787 he studied medicine with Dr. Atherton of Lancaster, and in 1790 began to practice in Worcester. He was one of the founders of the Worcester County Medical Society and for several years its secretary and librarian, was the first president of the district society and councillor of the Massachusetts Medical Society. But although he at once took a leading position in his profession, that soon became secondary to other interests. He had great influence in the Federal party and his contributions to the newspapers, especially during the War of 1812, were marked by their terse and epigrammatic style. In 1811 he was the editor of the Massachusetts Spy for a time.

Dr. Fiske also took a great interest in the internal improvements which occupied so much of the public mind in the early part of the nineteenth century, and was actively engaged in the building of the Boston and Worcester and the Stafford Turnpikes and the Blackstone Canal.

In 1798 he was town treasurer; town clerk from 1800 to 1803; and in the latter year was appointed a special justice of the Court of Common Pleas; from 1813 to 1815 he was a member of the Executive Council; and Register of Deeds from 1816 to 1821. He was a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, one of the founders and a member of the council of the American Antiquarian Society, corresponding secretary of the Linnæan Society of New England and of the Worcester Agricultural Society from 1824 to 1837.

In 1821 increasing deafness caused him to retire to private life and he devoted his time to his farm and to horticulture, in which he took a great interest. He lived in the old Judge Jennison house on Court Hill, where State street now is, and his garden and orchard extended westward to the top of the hill.

[Born, Brookfield, 2 September, 1762.

Died, Boston, 25 January, 1837.]

<sup>1</sup> Theophilus Parsons, after he was graduated from Harvard in 1769, studied law with Judge Trowbridge and began his professional life in Newburyport. He came to Boston in 1800 with a high reputation, and as a master of prize and admiralty law he ranked with John Lowell and Governor Sullivan. His appointment by Governor Strong to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Chief Justice Dana in 1806, occasioned some comment, as it was a departure from the usual precedent of appointing a chief justice from the bench, and was made over the head of the Senior Associate Justice, Theodore Sedgwick, at the private intercession of Judges Isaac Parker and Samuel Sewall. But a man of energy and character was needed to counteract the great laxity which had grown up in court procedure, and Judge Parsons's sweeping reforms soon showed the wisdom of the appointment. He held the position of chief justice until his death in 1813.

<sup>1</sup> In 1773, Mr. Thomas, having made an addition to his printing materials, sent a press and types to Newburyport, and established the first press ever set up in that place; and on December 4th, with his partner, Henry Walter Tinges, he began the publication of The Essex Journal, and Merrimack Packet: Or, The Massachusetts and New Hampshire General Advertiser. The price of the paper was "six shillings and eight pence lawful money," which the printers say is "as cheap as any newspaper in the four quarters of the globe." The first number contains the following advertisement:—

“PRINTING

Those ladies and gentlemen, who are desirous of seeing the curious art of printing, are hereby informed that on Monday next the printing office will be opened for their reception, and the printers ready to wait on all, who will do the honor of their company.

December 4th, 1773.”

The venture not proving successful, Mr. Thomas sold his interest within a year to Ezra Lunt, at a considerable loss. About two years later Lunt in turn sold out to John Mycall, a native of Worcester, England, who at that time was a school-master in Amesbury. Mycall shortly afterwards became the sole owner of the paper, which he published for many years. After his retirement from business, he bought a farm in Harvard, in Worcester County, and subsequently removed to Cambridgeport, where he died about 1826.

The following communication appears in the same issue:—

"Shakespear's tragedy of Richard III., is selected for performance this evening for the express purpose of introducing to the boards, a young gentleman of this town, in the arduous character of the crook-back'd tyrant. Master Loring, who has not yet arrived at his 17th year, is the adventurous candidate for the honors of the buskin, in this multiform and laborious personage. His claim to this experiment of his talents, is, we hear, supported by the private attestations of several judicious friends and good critics. To excel in Richard, is an achievement of no common proof. Genius, directed by science, and ripened by experience, has been considered indispensably requisite to pass a rigid public ordeal; yet we have no hesitation to say, that Master L. if candidly viewed as a débutant, will be thought no mean competitor for the laurels of Bosworth-field."

The committee held their first meeting at Coolidge's Tavern in Worcester, the following April. Work was immediately begun, and on 9 October, 1809, in a notice calling for an assessment the proprietors were notified that the road was finished and the toll-houses erected.

By the act of incorporation the company was authorized to erect four toll gates, in places not on any old road, which the committee should determine; but it was found, as the different sections of the road were completed, that it made such intersections with various old roads, that persons could easily travel on the turnpike a great part of the way, and avoid the toll gates; and the company was allowed to erect additional gates and subdivide the toll.

An act passed 16 March, 1805, established the following rates of toll on all turnpike roads within the State:

For each coach, chariot, phaeton, or other four-wheel spring carriage drawn by two horses,	.25
For each additional horse,	.02
For every waggon, drawn by two horses,	.10
For each additional horse,	.02
For every cart or waggon, drawn by two oxen,	.10
If drawn by more than two,	.12½
For every curricle,	.15
For every chaise, chair, sulkey or other carriage for pleasure, drawn by one horse,	.12½
For every cart, waggon or truck, drawn by one horse,	.06½

November, 1806.

1. Mrs. Thomas went to Worcester, with Levi in the Chariot.

3. Voted in Boston. Town of Worcester voted me thanks for the new street.<sup>1</sup>

For every man and horse,	.04
For every sleigh or sled, drawn by two oxen or horses,	.08
For each additional ox or horse,	.01
For every sleigh or sled, drawn by one horse,	.04
For all horses, mules or neat cattle, led or driven, besides those in teams or carriages, each,	.01
For all sheep or swine, per doz.,	.03

The corporation might commute these rates by taking a certain sum annually, and carts or waggons having wheels, the fellies of which were six inches broad or more, paid only half the regular toll.

Unless these rates were posted in a conspicuous place at each gate, no toll could be collected.

The act exempted from toll "any person that shall be passing on foot, or with his horse or carriage to or from his usual place of public worship, or from any person passing on military duty, or from any person residing in the town where the gate may be placed, unless they are going or returning from beyond the limits of said town, or from any person going to or from any grist-mill, or on the common and ordinary business of family concerns."

In 1826, that part of the road lying in Roxbury was discontinued, and its eastern end was established at the arch near the Punchbowl Tavern in Brookline.

In 1841 the company surrendered its charter and the road was maintained by the different towns through which it passed. After much opposition, the section in Worcester [the present Belmont street], was accepted by the town, 1 May, 1843.

<sup>1</sup> Aaron Bancroft, the son of Samuel and Lydia Parker Bancroft of Reading, Mass., entered Harvard in 1774, and when the college was closed in the following year on account of the outbreak of the war, worked upon his father's farm, and later marched to the relief of Cambridge with the Reading minute-men. After his graduation in 1778 he taught the town school in Cambridge for a few months, and then prepared for the ministry with Rev. Mr. Haven of Reading, beginning to preach in the autumn of 1779.

In 1780 he received an invitation to visit Nova Scotia, and having obtained permission from the Executive Council to leave the state, he lived in that province for three years and preached in various places. He returned in 1783, landing at Salem in July, and the next week was asked to supply the pulpit of the church in Worcester, during the illness of its minister, Rev. Thaddeus Maccarty. He preached there for eight weeks, and was then immediately engaged in several vacant parishes. Mr. Maccarty died in July, 1784, and in October Mr. Bancroft returned and preached again for five or six weeks, but this time his Arminian views caused great excitement; great differences of opinion arose, and the parish was so divided that even social intercourse was interrupted.

Meanwhile the committee for supplying the pulpit had been vainly endeavoring to find a successor to Mr. Maccarty, and at the town meeting 22 November, 1784, it was "Voted that their be a Day Set apart for fasting & Prayer in this Town for calling on the Divine for assistance for the re-establishment of the Gospel ministry in this Place." A week later it was voted that "Mr. Haven" preach four Sundays and after him Mr. Bancroft four. Mr. Bancroft accordingly occupied the pulpit again 10 January, 1785, and three days later fifty-four members presented a petition that the town—not the church—settle him as Mr. Maccarty's successor; and at the meeting 1 March, 1785, "It was Moved, that the Town agree to Settle Mr. Bancroft in the work of the Gospel Ministry, and Such other Person as may be agreeable to and chosen Solely by those who are desierous of hearing further and the Settlement and Salaries of both to be at the Expence of the Town at Large." This being passed in the negative, Mr. Bancroft's followers asked permission to form a new Society, and this was also refused. A voluntary association was then formed, a covenant adopted and a church organized under the corporate name of the "Second Parish in the town of Worcester." Among those most influential in its formation were Levi Lincoln, Joseph Allen, Edward Bangs, Timothy Paine, Timothy Bigelow and Isaiah Thomas. According to usage, the sixty-seven associates, of whom only two men and four women had been communicants, not having been dismissed from any other church for that purpose, were not competent to form a new one; so they devised the novel expedient of a public "lecture," at which the covenant was read, explained and signed.

Services began on the third Sunday in March in the Court House, and on 7 June, Mr. Bancroft consented to become the minister, with a salary of five hundred dollars.

At his ordination, 1 February, 1786, the feeling was so strong against his doctrines that only two ministers in the vicinity could be found to assist,—Rev. Timothy Harrington of Lancaster and Rev. Zabdiel Adams of Lunenburg. The new parish was incorporated 13 November, 1787, and was a poll and not a territorial parish, that is, it was composed of those of similar opinions without regard to local habitation, and was probably the first of the kind in Massachusetts outside of Boston.

Dr. Bancroft was the minister of the Second Parish until his death in 1839, a period of fifty-three years, during the last twelve of which Rev. Alonzo Hill, the second minister, was his colleague.

Outside of his parish Dr. Bancroft took an active part in general educational and religious matters. In 1810 he received the degree of D.D. from Harvard. He was trustee of Leicester Academy from 1800 to 1831, and its president for many years; president of the Worcester County Bible Society, of the American Unitarian Association from its formation in 1825 to 1836 and of the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge; vice-president of the Worcester and Middlesex Missionary Society and of the American Antiquarian Society from 1816 to 1832; and a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

In 1807 he published a "Life of Washington," which was twice reprinted; and in 1821 a series of doctrinal discourses, of which President John Adams wrote to him, "I thank you for your kind letter of Dec. 30th, and above all, for the gift of a precious volume. It is a chain of diamonds set in links of gold. I have never read, nor heard read, a volume of sermons better calculated and adapted to the age and country in which it was written. How different from the sermons I heard and read in the town of Worcester from the year 1755 to 1758 . . . You may well suppose, that I have heard controversies enough; but, after all, I declare to you, that your twenty-nine sermons have expressed the result of all my reading, experience, and reflections, in a manner more satisfactory to me, than I could have done in the best days of my strength."

He also published many sermons in pamphlet form.

the superintendence of William Manning, who, in 1814, began to publish the Massachusetts Spy in Worcester. In 1804 Manning was succeeded by Joseph T. Buckingham, the founder of the Boston Courier.

In the preceding thirty years a great revolution had been brought about in the art of printing, greatly lessening the labors of the journeyman; the power press had come into use, and rollers for inking the forms had succeeded the old mode of beating the type by balls. The force of a printing office at that time consisted of journeymen and apprentices. The wages of the former were not more than six or seven dollars a week; and for piece work, sixpence a token (ten quires of paper) at press, and a shilling for composing a thousand ems were the highest prices paid. The apprentices, who served until they were twenty-one, ranked in the order of their seniority in the office, not by age,—the elder boys being employed chiefly on book-work, their juniors working at the press, while the youngest were the printers' devils.

From 1789 to 1793 inclusive, Thomas and Andrews published the Massachusetts Magazine, a monthly, illustrated with engravings, which was quite popular in its day. In the publication of school-books they had almost a monopoly, and for more than a generation the greater part of those in use in the United States bore their imprint. The forms of several of these were kept standing. "Webster's Spelling Book" kept one press, and often two or three, constantly employed, and two or three large editions of the duodecimo Bible were printed every year. Other books which gave constant employment to the journeymen and apprentices were Rev. Jedidiah Morse's geographical works,—the "Gazetteer," 2 vols., the "American Geography," the "Geography made easy" and the "Elements of Geography"; "Beauties of the Bible" for schools, then just coming into extensive use; "Pike's Arithmetic"; "Perry's Dictionary"; Dr. Belknap's "Sacred Poetry"; the "Worcester Collection of Sacred Harmony"; the "Bridgewater Collection"; the "Union Harmony"; and numerous other musical works "printed typographically." Many text-books were also printed for Harvard College.

Their store in Boston was at 45 Newbury street (now Washington), "at the Sign of Faust's Head," which was the same sign formerly used by the occupants of the birthplace of Franklin.

He built for their store the first brick block in Worcester, just south of Court Hill, where Granite Row later stood, and their business has been carried on by their successors, on the same spot, to the present time. In 1791 he relinquished the business to his son. Mr. Waldo lived in the John Chandler house on the east side of Lincoln square. He married, 3 May, 1757, Rebecca, daughter of Nicholas and Martha Saunders Salisbury, of Boston.

<sup>3</sup> William Paine, the eldest son of Timothy and Sarah Chandler Paine of Worcester, was graduated from Harvard in 1768, his name being the second in a class of forty, at a time when the names were arranged according to the dignity of families. He studied medicine with Dr. Edward A. Holyoke of Salem, a distinguished physician of that time, and began to practice in Worcester in 1771. 18 January, 1773, he entered into partnership with Levi Shephard and Ebenezer Hunt of Northampton "as Traders in the Art, Mystery & Business [of] an apothecary and of the Practice of Physick," and opened the first drug store in Worcester, at Lincoln square. This partnership lasted until July, 1783.

Dr. Paine early attached himself to the loyalist cause, and is supposed to have assisted his uncle, James Putnam, in drawing up the famous protest of the fifty-two loyalists of Worcester, in 1774. In the autumn of that year he went to England for the purpose, it is said, of completing his medical studies, but on his return in May, 1775, he found that he had been denounced as a loyalist, and he immediately took passage again for England. In the following November he received the degree of M. D. from the University of Aberdeen and was soon after appointed an apothecary.

cary to the English forces in America. He served in Rhode Island and New York until January, 1781, when he sailed for England with Lord Winchelsea and his family, but the vessel being driven out of her course by storms, they landed at Lisbon, and he spent several months on the continent as physician to that family. While he was in London in 1782, he was admitted licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. He returned to New York in March of that year, and in October was appointed "Physician to His Majesty's Hospitals within the district of North America commanded by Sir Guy Carleton" and was stationed at Halifax. After the withdrawal of the troops in 1783 he was retired on half pay, and the island of La Tête, in Passamaquoddy Bay, having been granted to him for his services, he took possession of it in the following year, and built a house, intending to live there permanently; but he remained there for a few months only, and then removed to St. John and resumed his practice. While there he was elected a member of the Assembly of New Brunswick, and served as its clerk, was a justice for the county of Sunbury, and in October, 1785, was appointed by Sir John Wentworth Principal Deputy Surveyor of Woods in the Province of New Brunswick. In the summer of 1787, by permission of the War Office, he went to Salem, where he had a good professional business, and after the death of his father, 17 July, 1793, he returned to Worcester, and occupied the family estate on Lincoln street until his death.

Dr. Paine was a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and of the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries of Copenhagen. In 1790 he was elected an honorary member of the Massachusetts Medical Society and was also a member of the Linnæan Society, the Essex Historical Society, and one of the founders of the American Antiquarian Society, of which he was vice-president from 1813 to 1816.

He married, 23 September, 1773, Lois, daughter of Timothy Orne of Salem, by whom he had six children.

Died, Worcester, 19 April, 1833.]

<sup>1</sup>Samuel Turell Armstrong, after serving an apprenticeship to Manning and Loring, printers and booksellers, in Boston, began business on State street with Jonathan Belcher. At the dissolution of this partnership, which was of short duration, he opened a printing office in Charlestown and there published the first numbers of a religious magazine, the Panoptist. In 1811 he returned to Boston and began a successful career as a bookseller and publisher.

He was twice a representative to the General Court from Boston, and for one year a senator from Suffolk; was lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts for two terms, and in 1834, on the resignation of Governor Davis, was acting governor for ten months; and was mayor of Boston in 1836.

6. Misses Canada removed into my house that Mr. Baneroft removed out of.

8. New Bills, called Facilities,<sup>2</sup> which I projected for Worcester bank, were first put in circulation.

<sup>1</sup> Rev. Aaron Baneroft first lived in Worcester on Salisbury street, in the house later occupied by Anthony Chase and John S. C. Knowlton, where the Armory now stands. He then occupied the house on the same street, in which George Baneroft was born, and at this time removed to the east side of Main street, a little south of Thomas, where he lived until his death in 1839.

<sup>2</sup> The country banks had for some time previous to this been subjected to great annoyance by having their bills, as soon as they were issued, bought by Boston brokers, who demanded specie for their redemption, and by withdrawing them from the market, prevented their free circulation. As a result of this continued run upon them, those who owed the banks were compelled to pay installments on their notes in foreign bills, i. e. those issued by banks outside of Boston, many of which were counterfeits, and to pay a discount of one and one-half or two per cent. To put a stop to this practice, the Worcester Bank, with several others, issued notes called facilities, "to prevent," as the Massachusetts Spy announced, "the scandalous exertions constantly practiced on the public under a pretense that the bills of Country Banks are not so good as those of Boston, and thereby robbing the industrious and enterprising of the just profits of their exertions. To crush such vermin is the interest and duty of every good citizen. By encouraging the circulation of bills which do not allow these Harpies to drain the vaults of specie, a complete stop is put to their nefarious purposes."

A protest immediately arose in Boston. The Boston Repertory of 19 May, 1807, under the heading, "Beware of Bank Notes which promise no payment," says that they are desired to "caution the public against being deceived by a new species of Bank Notes, which are receivable at the Banks from which they issue for debts due to those particular Banks, but which for other purposes are worth less than blank paper. We have yet seen these bills from two Banks only, viz. the Worcester and Coos Banks. To prove the grossness of this imposition, it is only necessary to copy the face of the Bill, which is—The President, Directors and Company of the — Bank promise to RECEIVE of — or Bearer, this Bill for FIVE DOLLARS, in payment of debts due at said Bank, &c."

9. Fast day.
14. Attended Court's Com<sup>ee</sup> on turnpike 1 day.
15. My son went to Springfield.<sup>1</sup>

The Worcester Bank estimated the facilities in discounts at the same value as its other bills, and they were issued and accounted for as a part of the amount which by law it was permitted to discount on its capital. Traders took them in payment of debts and sold their goods for them at par with foreign bills. They were offered in exchange for foreign bills in the Worcester papers, and on 16 June, 1807, Mr. Thomas calls on all those who are indebted to him to make payment, and offers to receive Worcester Bank facilities equal to specie.

They were evidently in circulation for several years, for on 6 January, 1810, in the only record made of them on the books of the bank, it was "voted that the bills denominated Facilities, which were put in circulation, and have been returned, be burnt, the sum of Forty eight Thousand two hundred & twenty dollars comprizing Twenty three hundred bills of five Dollars each, and Thirty six hundred and seventy two bills of ten Dollars each were accordingly burnt in our presence.

in Joy's buildings, on the west corner of Congress and Water streets, and then in Scollay's building on Tremont street.

After the incorporation of the Athenæum in February, 1807, it occupied three rooms in the old wooden building, covered with rough cast, next north from the King's Chapel burying-ground, which had formerly been occupied by the rectors of King's Chapel. The first room was the news or reading room; the second contained the library of the Athenæum and the American Academy; and the third the private library of John Quincy Adams.

The corporation organized 7 April, 1807, with Theophilus Parsons for its first President. Mr. Thomas's name appears on the list of the original subscribers.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Sullivan had been prominent in the public life of Massachusetts since the beginning of the Revolution, holding many important offices, and from 1790 to this time had been attorney-general. He was the first democratic governor of the state, and his election, which closed an exciting campaign, was considered a great triumph by the friends of Jefferson. Party spirit had been increasing rapidly for some time and the newspapers had been unusually bitter and virulent, Governor Strong being represented as an enemy to liberty, and Mr. Sullivan as opposed to order and virtue, and destitute of moral principle. Over 81,000 votes were cast, of which Mr. Sullivan received 42,000, and, as in 1806, there was a democratic majority in both branches of the legislature. His administration was characterized by a candor and impartiality which, while it disappointed many of his supporters, who expected to find him more of a party politician, won for him the respect of both parties. He was re-elected in 1808, and died during his second term of office, 10 December, of that year.

<sup>2</sup> The Massachusetts Charitable Fire Society was incorporated in 1794, "for the purpose of relieving such as may suffer by fire, and of stimulating genius to useful discoveries tending to secure the lives and property of their fellow men from destruction by that element." In addition to giving this relief, a committee was appointed annually to examine and award premiums for engines and inventions which came within the object of the society.

delivered an oration. Governor Sullivan and Lieut. Gov<sup>r</sup>. Lincoln<sup>1</sup> were this day first sworn into Office. I was present.

The first constitution of the society required that annually, on the last Wednesday in May, "a public discourse, expressive of the advantages arising from charitable institutions, shall be delivered before the Society, by some person to be appointed by the Government for that purpose, at which time a collection shall be made for the benefit of the Society's fund."

At the conclusion of the annual meetings, which were held in the Court House or the Old State House, the members marched in procession to King's Chapel where the exercises were held.

<sup>1</sup> Levi Lincoln, the third son of Enoch and Rachel Fearing Lincoln of Hingham, Mass., was apprenticed to an ironsmith, but his love of study induced him to relinquish this trade, and after six months of preparation he entered Harvard and was graduated in the class of 1772. Happening to be present in court while John Adams was pleading, he was so carried away by his eloquence that he changed his original intention of entering the ministry, and studied law with Daniel Farnham in Newburyport for about a year, and then entered the office of Joseph Hawley in Northampton. He marched to Cambridge with the minute-men as a volunteer in 1775, and soon after was admitted to the bar in Hampshire County, and immediately opened an office in Worcester. The greater part of the leading men of the county were Tories, and when the courts were re-opened in 1775, after having been closed a year, only two lawyers remained: John Sprague of Lancaster and Joshua Upham of Brookfield. A wide field was thus opened to him in his profession and he soon acquired a large practice. He was undoubtedly the head of the county bar, from the close of the Revolution to the beginning of the century; was retained in every case of importance; and for many years constantly attended the courts in Middlesex and Hampshire.

But his professional duties did not prevent him from taking an active part in public affairs. In 1775 he was appointed Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas for the County of Worcester and was Judge of Probate from January, 1777, to 1781. In 1779 he was special commissioner to prosecute the government claims against the large estates of the refugees, under the absentee act, and commissioner to hasten the payment of the Continental tax. He was a delegate to the Massachusetts Convention for forming the state constitution in 1780. The next year he was elected by the General Court a representative to the Continental Congress, but declined the election. In 1783 the degree of barrister at law was conferred on him by the Supreme Court, an honor conferred on only one other member of the county bar after the Revolution—Judge Sprague of Lancaster. In 1796 he was a representative to the General Court and in the following year was in the state senate. In the autumn of 1800, in spite of his democratic principles, he succeeded Dwight Foster as representative to the Seventh Congress. He took his seat 4 March, 1801, but the next day was appointed by Jefferson, Attorney General of the United States and was provisional Secretary of State until the arrival of Madison at Washington in the following May. A few days after his appointment, Albert Gallatin, before his own appointment as Secretary of the Treasury, wrote of the two Massachusetts members of the Cabinet, General Dearborn the Secretary of War and Mr. Lincoln: "Mr. Lincoln is a good lawyer, a fine scholar, a man of great discretion and sound judgment, and of the mildest and most amiable manners. He has never, I should think from his manners, been out of his own state, or mixed much with the world, except on business. Both are men of 1776, sound and decided Republicans; both are men of the strictest integrity; and both, but Mr. Lincoln principally, have a great weight of character to the Eastward with both parties."

He retained this office until December, 1804, when, unwilling to be separated longer from his family, he sent his resignation to Mr. Jefferson, who replied: "I received last night your letter, proposing to resign your office; and I received it with real affliction. It would have been my greatest happiness, to have kept together to the end of my term our executive family; for our harmony and cordiality have really made us but as one family. Yet, I am a father, and have been a husband. I know the sacred duties which these relations impose; the feelings they inspire; and that they are not to be resisted by a warm heart. I yield, therefore, to your wishes. You carry with you, my entire approbation of your official conduct, my thanks for your services, my regrets on losing them, and my affectionate friendship."

In 1806 and 1810 Mr. Lincoln was a member of the council of Massachusetts. In 1807 and 1808 he was lieutenant-governor of the state, and on the death of Governor Sullivan, 10 December, 1808, became acting governor. The next year he was a candidate for the same office, but was defeated by Christopher Gore, the Federal candidate.

In 1811, on appointing him an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Madison wrote to him: "You will see by the commission which will be forwarded from the Department of State, that I have taken the liberty of nominating you to the Senate as successor to Judge Cushing, notwithstanding your remonstrances against a recall into the national service. I was induced to this step, not only by my personal wishes, but by those of others, between whom and yourself exists all the reciprocal respect that can add weight to them, and particularly by their persuading themselves, that your patriotism would acquiesce in an appointment, however contrary it might be to your previous inclinations. I venture to flatter myself that in this we may not be disappointed: and that, in every event, you will regard the liberty I have taken in imposing the dilemma upon you, with the indulgence due to my motives, and to the great esteem and sincere friendship of which I pray you to accept my renewed assurances." Weakness of sight which resulted temporarily in almost total blindness, compelled him to decline this honor.

In 1782 Mr. Lincoln bought of John Hancock his estate on Lincoln street, where he lived for the remainder of his life. He married 25 November, 1781, Martha, daughter of Daniel and Rebecca Salisbury Waldo.

<sup>1</sup> In March, 1801, the Court of Sessions appointed Daniel Clap, Isaiah Thomas and Salem Towne a committee to report a suitable place for a Court House, and to ascertain the quantity and boundaries of the land belonging to the County upon which the Court House then stood. This committee reported at the same term of the Court "that the site where the present Court house stands, together with a peice of land adjoining the same, which will be presented gratis to the County by Isaiah Thomas, and also another peice of land lately belonging to the Town of Worcester, which will be presented gratis by Mr. Samuel Chandler, provided the same is appropriated for the accommodation of the Court house, or lies common, is, from its vicinity to the gaol, its pleasantness, dryness of soil &c. the most eligible of the many that have come under their observation, and where the new Court house ought, in their opinion to be erected. The land proposed to be given by Mr. Thomas adjoins and lies back of the land now owned by the County and of that proposed to be given by Mr. Chandler—is about 100 feet in front & about 112 feet in rear. The condition of the gift is, that the land now occupied by the Court house is to lie open & common. Mr. Thomas will give another convenient spot for a vault & necessary house, and engages not to erect any building at the East end of his new wood house that may incommode the new Court house."

This report was accepted and the building was erected chiefly under the direction of Mr. Thomas. On a silver plate inclosed in a leaden jar which was placed in the corner-stone was this inscription!—"The corner stone was laid Oct. 1, 1801, by Isaiah Thomas, Esq. who with William Caldwell, Esq. Sheriff of the County, and Hon. Salem Towne, were appointed a committee for building and completing this (now intended) Court House. The old Court House now stands two feet south-east from this spot, 1801."

In 1804 the committee appointed to examine the accounts of the building committee state in their report that Mr. Thomas had made no allowance for his services and "are of opinion that Isaiah Thomas Esq<sup>rs</sup>. services as Agent for building the Court house, is, at least, fully equal to his proportion of the expense of repairing the Court house hill. And that allowing the whole amount of the Account reported within, said Thomas agrees to accept the same in full for his services."

did not practice long, as the only record of his having attended the court in Worcester was at the June term in 1774. He afterwards became an officer in the British service and rose to the rank of major of dragoons. After his retirement on half pay he spent the greater part of his time in the United States.

<sup>1</sup> Mathew Carey, a native of Ireland, and a well known publisher and philanthropist, was apprenticed to a bookseller in Dublin at the age of fifteen, and two years later his first production, an essay on duelling, was printed in the Hibernian Journal. In 1779, excitement caused by a pamphlet urging the repeal of the penal code against Catholics compelled him to flee to Paris, where he knew Franklin and Lafayette, and was for a time under the younger Didot. After a year's absence he returned and established the Freeman's Journal, and in 1783 the Volunteers' Journal, which by its bold and determined opposition to the government became a powerful factor in politics, and eventually brought about the legislative independence of Ireland; but in 1784, he was imprisoned for a too violent attack, and after his release in the fall of that year he came to America, where Lafayette provided the means to establish him in business in Philadelphia. In the following January he began the publication of the Pennsylvania Herald, the first newspaper in the United States to furnish accurate reports of legislative debates, he acting as his own reporter. In October, 1786, with others, he began the publication of the Columbia Magazine, and in the following January, the American Museum, which he conducted for six years.

In 1791, he married and opened a small bookstore in Philadelphia and eventually became the most eminent publisher in the country. He retired from active business life in 1824. He was the author of numerous pamphlets, many of them on political subjects, and of several books which were successful at the time.

<sup>1</sup> This was the first bridge built at this place, and cost about $9,000. It consisted of two or three tiers of round timbers laid lengthways and then crossways, and then overlaid with a course of hewn timber, covered with plank, and fastened to large abutments at the shores. This soon proved to be weak and after a few years was succeeded by another. Ward's "History of Shrewsbury."—Worcester Magazine, II., 13.

<sup>2</sup> Susannah, the fourth child of Moses Thomas the elder, was born in Boston, and was married four times: first, to the master of a ship, with whom she lived in Edenton, N. C.; second to Captain Hyman, in Baltimore; third to — Freeman, who had been a captain in the army, with whom she lived in Philadelphia; and fourth, to Captain Hugh Macculloch, a very respectable and wealthy citizen of Philadelphia.

<sup>3</sup> A number of the citizens of Worcester, many of them well known, were indicted for participating in this riot, the indictment setting forth that they "on the tenth day of July last past, at said Worcester, with force and arms, that is to say with Staves and clubs did riotously and unlawfully meet and assemble themselves together to disturb the peace of this Commonwealth, and being so assembled and met together did then and there unlawfully break, and enter the House of Sewall Moore and break and destroy his furniture and assault and beat his children and upon Mehitable Moore, Wife of said Sewall Moore being then and there in the Peace of God and this Commonwealth did commit an Assault and her did take and imprison and place upon a wooden rail, and with noise and clamour to the great disgrace of the said Mehitable Moore, and to the disturbance of the good citizens of said Town did carry her, the said Mehitable Moore upon said rail through the public streets to the distance of one Mile, and other wrongs, injuries and enormities then and there did, to the great damage of the said Sewall Moore, his Wife and Children, and against the peace of the Commonwealth, and the Law, and in evil example to others in the like case to offend."

Governor Lincoln in his notice of Joseph Allen (Fire Society Reminiscences), tells the following story of the trial: Among the defendants was a negro, with whom the others, now ashamed of their conduct, and undeniably guilty, did not care to be associated in a public trial. To avoid greater exposure and mortification from an investigation of the case, it was arranged that they should severally plead guilty to the indictment, and they thus paraded around the bar, with a selectman at the head and the negro at the foot of the list. When it came to the latter's turn the Clerk (Mr. Allen), in his usual serious, formal tone, addressed him: "Peter Malbone, what say you to this indictment—are you guilty or not guilty?" Either not understanding, or forgetting the precise language of those who had preceded him, with a curiously quizzical look and showing his teeth, he cried out, "Massa Allen, I don't want anything to do with this Court!"

<sup>1</sup> This court had been established by an act of 31 May, 1639, which provided that "there shall be held in each County a Court of General Sessions of the Peace by the Justices of each County to hear and determine all matters relative to the conservation of the peace, cognizable at common law." It had remained practically unchanged until an act of 19 June, 1807, which provided that it should consist of one chief justice and a specified number of associates for the several counties, who were to act as the General Court of Sessions. The justices of the new court for the County of Worcester were Pliny Merriek, Abraham Lincoln, Moses White, John Spurr and John Whiting. In June, 1809, the jurisdiction of the General Court of Sessions was transferred to the County Court of Common Pleas, but two years later its powers were restored.

<sup>1</sup> Samuel Hall was born in Medford, Mass., and served his apprenticeship with his uncle, Daniel Fowle of Portsmouth, N. H. From 1761 to 1768 he was in partnership, in Newport, R. I., with Anne, widow of James Franklin, whose daughter he married. He then established the first printing press in Salem, Mass., and began the publication of the Essex Gazette, and in three or four years admitted his brother Ebenezer as a partner. In 1775, to accommodate the state convention and the army, they set up their press in Stoughton Hall in Cambridge, and after the evacuation of Boston, Samuel (his brother having died in the meantime), removed to that place. He was again in Salem from 1781 to 1785, when he returned to Boston, where he opened a printing office and a book and stationery store in Cornhill.

<sup>2</sup> Elijah Dix, the eldest son of James and Sarah Bond Dix of Watertown, had few advantages as a boy, and wishing to obtain a better education than was possible at home, went to live with Rev. Andrew Hutchinson of Grafton, doing sufficient work to pay for his board and instruction. In April, 1765, at the age of seventeen, he was apprenticed to Dr. John Green, "to learn the art of physick and chirurgery," and after completing these studies, he fitted himself for a druggist with Dr. William Greenleaf of Boston. He practised in Worcester from 1770 to 1795, living in the house at the southerly end of Court Hill, which he built before the Revolution, and his office and drug store were in a two-story building near by. He had a good reputation as a physician, and in addition to his practice, which was large, he engaged in various business enterprises, by which he acquired quite a large fortune, which he invested in Maine lands, and was the founder and original proprietor of the town of Dixmont.

In 1795 he removed to Boston, and in the Columbian Centinel of 6 June, Elijah Dix and John Haskins, Jr. give notice that they have commenced business under the firm of Dix and Haskins, and offer for sale at their store on State street not only drugs and medicines, but groceries and general merchandise. They were also large importers and commission merchants. Dr. Dix, however, retained an interest in his Worcester store and was in partnership with his former apprentice and successor, Jeremiah Robinson, until 1807. He was later a member of the firm of Dix and Brinley, "on the south side of Faneuil Hall Market," which, in addition to its drug business, established extensive chemical works at South Boston, with furnaces for refining sulphur and a laboratory for clarifying camphor.

Dr. Dix was identified with many of the public improvements of Worcester. He was one of the promoters of the Boston and Worcester Turnpike; was the originator of the stock company which built the "Centre school house," the first grammar school in town; and was the first to plant elm trees on Main street, thereby setting an example to others which resulted in the row of trees which, until within a few years, lined both its sides. He was also greatly interested in horticulture, and the famous Dix pear was the product of his garden.

He died suddenly in 1809, while on one of his expeditions to his Maine property, and it was more than suspected that he was foully dealt with.

Dr. Dix married, 1 October, 1771, Dorothy Lynde, daughter of Joseph Lynde. Dorothea Lynde Dix, known as the "American Florence Nightingale," was his granddaughter.

East by common land, a highway running thro' part of this land." In some way, not shown upon the records, this land came into the possession of William Jennison, and after his death in 1744, one-quarter of it was conveyed by his daughter Abigail Baldwin and her husband William to Luke Brown, the first of the name in Worcester, who was Jennison's son-in-law and the keeper of the "Hancock Arms." In 1781 Mr. Thomas bought of the estate of the second Luke Brown a part of this tract; and in 1797 another portion of about nine acres, to the north and in the rear of the Thomas lot, was sold by the third Luke Brown to Samuel and Stephen Salisbury.

The lot sold by Mr. Thomas to Clark Whittemore at this time was about one hundred feet deep, about thirty-two feet in front and about thirty-six in the rear, and was occupied by him until 1833, when he sold it to Stephen Salisbury, who conveyed it to this Society 10 March, 1851.

Clark Whittemore came to Worcester in the early part of the century and opened a book bindery in his house, which he carried on for many years.

Mr. Sever was graduated from Harvard in 1778, studied law with Levi Lincoln, Sen., and after his admission to the bar in 1781, practiced for two years in Kingston. In 1785 he removed to Worcester and lived on a farm which his father had purchased for him, where the Lincoln House now stands. He died in Worcester, in 1798, at the age of thirty-six.

<sup>1</sup>The passage of the Embargo Act, 22 December, 1807, forbidding clearance of all American vessels to foreign ports, and limiting the coasting trade to the United States, completely paralyzed the commerce of New England, and suddenly, without warning, cut off multitudes of her merchants and sailors from their accustomed employments, and reduced them to enforced idleness. Manufacturing had not then sprung up, and her interests, outside of agriculture, were exclusively commercial. In consequence, a time of great political excitement followed, and the whole year 1808 was a turmoil hitherto unprecedented in the political history of the country. But the act "more effectually to enforce the embargo" passed 9 January, 1809, to prevent the many evasions of the law which were constantly made, threw New England into open rebellion against the administration. Already, before its passage, meetings had been held in the commercial towns to protest against it, which Governor Lincoln, a strong partisan of Jefferson, had condemned as seditious and uncalled for. When, however, it became known that the Force Act had actually become a law, the popular fury knew no bounds. Petitions from the various towns demanding its repeal poured into the General Court, which had a small Federalist majority, and were referred to a joint committee, which presented a long report, a set of resolutions and a bill which was promptly vetoed by Governor Lincoln. The resolutions declared the Force Act to be unjust, unconstitutional, oppressive, and not legally binding upon the people of Massachusetts, but urged them to abstain from actual violence; recommended a memorial to Congress; announced that Massachusetts would "coöperate with any of the other States in all legal and constitutional measures for procuring such amendments to the Constitution of the United States as shall be judged necessary"; and gave instructions that copies of the resolutions should be sent to the several states.

Early in March also, the General Court, at the end of its session, and just before the close of Congress, issued an address to the people so strong and decided, that its effects were felt outside of New England; and at the Massachusetts election in April, Gore defeated Lincoln by a majority of nearly 3,000 in 93,000 votes, and the Federalists were strengthened in both branches of the General Court.

<sup>1</sup> Stephen Salisbury, the son of Nicholas and Martha Saunders Salisbury, of Boston, upon coming of age in 1767, entered into partnership with his elder brother, under the firm name of Samuel and Stephen Salisbury, and came to Worcester to establish a branch of the business. Their first store was in a low, one-story building north of Lincoln square, but after they built the Salisbury mansion, in 1770, it was removed to the front room at the right of its entrance, while their heavy merchandise was stored in a building near by. The rest of the house was occupied by Stephen Salisbury and his mother.

Worcester, then a town of hardly a thousand inhabitants, proved a good situation for the centre of a country trade. There was no competition and, as Mr. Salisbury had the recommendation of being an importer, small traders over a large territory soon found that they could not only buy their goods almost as cheaply in Worcester as in Boston, but by doing so could save the expense of transportation. Mr. Salisbury gained the confidence of his customers by his promptness, fair dealing and cordial manners, and soon built up a large and profitable business. His files of letters show relations of friendship and affection which would not now be expected from customers, while those from his brother express surprise and gratification at the aid the country store furnished in keeping up the credit of the firm, by enabling it to make prompt foreign remittances. The partnership continued with entire harmony until the death of Samuel Salisbury in 1818. Mr. Salisbury was devoted to the business, and held no public office, though his name appears on patriotic committees at the time of the Revolution.

He married, 31 January, 1797, Elizabeth, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Tuckerman of Boston.

<sup>1</sup> In January, 1785, according to Mr. Ellery B. Crane's pamphlet on the "Early Paper Mills in Massachusetts," Mr. Thomas bought of Ephraim McFarland, for ninety pounds, the southerly half of a dam and water privilege at what is now Quinsigamond Village. In November, 1787, he sold this property to Dr. Elijah Dix for eighty-five pounds, from whom he again bought it in January, 1793, for one hundred pounds and sometime during that year began the erection of a paper mill. Rev. Peter Whitney, in his "History of Worcester County," published in 1793, says in his notice of Mr. Thomas that "he is now engaged in building in Worcester, as large a Paper Mill as is in this state." This was the second in the county, the first having been built in Sutton by Abijah Burbank in 1776. It was evidently finished in the following winter, for in February, 1794, he advertised for three or four journeymen papermakers and for clean linen and cotton and linen rags. The mill was supplied with two vats of about 110 pounds capacity, which were usually operated fifteen hours a day, and furnished employment for ten men and eleven girls. From twelve to fourteen hundred pounds of hand-made paper were manufactured there weekly. In February, 1798, Mr. Thomas sold the mill, together with land, house, saw and grist mill, to Caleb and Elijah Burbank, who conducted it for some years in connection with their mill in Sutton.

The company, which was assembled by fife and drum, marched through the principal streets of Boston, and escorted the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Council, with the General Court and invited guests to the First Church, where the election sermon was preached. At the close of the service the annual dinner was held, usually in Faneuil Hall, at which the captain presided at the head of the centre table, having on his right the Governor, and on his left the President of Harvard University, who, if he was a clergyman, returned thanks. At about four o'clock the guests retired, and the company marched to their allotted square at the northwest corner of the Common, where the public ceremonies of the day were commenced by calling the roll of active and honorary members, according to seniority. The election of officers followed, the votes being counted on a drum-head, and when the result was declared the drummer beat the roll three times for the captain, twice for the lieutenant and once for the ensign, the Governor and Council were notified of the election and their approbation was requested. The guests were then escorted from the State House, and as the Governor entered the square a salute of thirteen guns was fired and he was led to the chair of state in the centre of the western side, supported by the civil department on his right and the military on his left. After the usual salutes and evolutions the old commander resigned his insignia of office and his successor assumed the command.

In 1809 the day was celebrated with all its ancient forms. The Boston Repertory in describing the ceremonies says:—

“As it is customary for the Governour of the Commonwealth to bear a part in the ceremonies of the day, a large number of the young federal gentlemen of Boston and the vicinity had prepared to avail themselves of this opportunity of exhibiting their respect for his Excellency CHRISTOPHER GORE, by attending him into town. Arrangements for the same tribute of respect were likewise made by a number of citizens of the County of Middlesex.

“Accordingly, in conformity to the notice given in the papers, a Cavaleade formed on the Common at half past 7 o'clock in the morning, consisting of above 300 on horse-back, and about forty carriages. They proceeded towards Waltham, and met His Excellency in the upper part of Cambridge, attended by about the same number from Middlesex, who had assembled at his seat. The whole cavalcade, consisting of SIX HUNDRED AND FIFTY horse, and EIGHTY-SEVEN CARRIAGES attended his Excellency into Boston, through Cambridge and Charlestown, where he was saluted from the heights by the Charlestown Artillery. When the escort reached the Suffolk line on Charlestown bridge, a salute was fired by a company of Artillery on Cops Hill, and Christ Church Bells rang Washington's March.

“The streets were crowded with spectators; on passing the Old State House, the citizens gave a cheer of welcome;—on the Governour's arrival at his house adjacent to the common, he was received with three cheers.”

<sup>1</sup> In 1638 Rev. Joseph Glover, a wealthy dissenting clergyman in England, who was actively interested in the settlement of Massachusetts, and who wished to introduce printing into the colonies, engaged Stephen Daye, a London printer to come to Cambridge; and in January, 1639, Daye began printing, in President Dunster's house, upon the first press set up in the North American Colonies. The press remained in Cambridge for about sixty years, always controlled by the government and under the direction of the college authorities, and for thirty years printing was carried on exclusively there.

In 1648 or 1649 Daye was succeeded by Samuel Green, whose son Bartholomew, in 1704, began the publication of The Boston News-Letter, the first newspaper printed in New England. In 1656 a second press, also under the care of Green, was established in Cambridge by the corporation in England for propagating the gospel among the Indians in New England. The books of this corporation had formerly been printed in London, but after the Indian students in Cambridge had been taught to read, and Eliot and Pierson had translated the primers and catechisms into the Indian language, it became necessary that these works should be printed under the inspection of the translators. The Bible printed here in 1663 by Green and Marmaduke Johnson was of sufficient importance to attract great attention in England, and the press of Harvard College was for a time as celebrated as those of Oxford and Cambridge.

Green continued printing for many years, and died in Cambridge, 1 January, 1702, at the age of eighty-seven. Marmaduke Johnson was sent to America by the same corporation in 1660 to assist in printing the Indian Bible. He was associated with Green for a few years, and also printed some books on his own account. He died in 1665.

<sup>1</sup> Neither its records nor the newspapers of the day give us any information as to the reasons for the foundation of this society, but it is supposed to have been caused by the burning of the weaver's shop of Cornelius and Peter Stowell, at what is now the corner of Park and Washington streets, 4 January, 1793; for on 23 January, following, twenty-two men met at "The United States Arms Tavern" (Exchange Hotel), and organized the Worcester Fire Society. The membership was limited to thirty, and meetings were held on the first Monday of each quarter.

One of the articles of the constitution required that "at notice of Fire, if within one mile of a Bank Building, every Member shall repair to the place with his Buckets, and afterwards shall repair with his Bags, Bed-Key, and Screw-Driver to the dwelling-house, ware-house, or shop of the Member most in danger, and use his best endeavors, by the direction of the owner, if present, to remove and secure all his goods, and return them as soon as convenient, with safety, under penalty of three dollars." The society took particular care of public buildings, and the property of "the Widow and Family of any deceased Member, when more in danger than the property of any of the members of said Society."

Another article provided that "each Member shall constantly keep together in some conspicuous place in his dwelling-house, two leather Buckets, each containing at least eight quarts; two Bags, each Bag one yard and an half long, and one yard and an half round, with strings at the mouths, that they may be drawn together with the greatest despatch—an iron Bed-Key with a Screw-Driver at one end, and a common Screw-Driver. The Buckets and Bags to be marked and numbered with the first letter of the owner's Christian name and his surname at length, under penalty for being unprovided, viz., each Bag, Bucket, or Bed-Key, fifty cents; and for each and every article separate from the others, or not in a conspicuous place, except the Screw-Driver fifty cents; and for the Screw-Driver twenty-five cents; and for putting either of the Bags or Buckets to any other use than that designated by this Institution, one dollar for each."

The clerk, under penalty of one dollar, was required to notify one of the members two days before each meeting to examine with him the apparatus of each member, and if he refused, or did not provide "some one of his brethren to walk for him," he paid a fine of fifty cents. There were also fines for absence from the meetings and from the roll-call.

Until the formation of the Mutual Fire Society, in 1822, the society was the only organized protection against fire in the town. Since the establishment of the Worcester Fire Department in 1835, it has continued as a social organization, and still holds its quarterly meetings.

<sup>1</sup> This was the tannery owned in 1789 by Palmer and Daniel Goulding, and later by Samuel Johnson, and was located on Mill Brook, east of the Exchange Hotel.

In April, 1815, Enoch Flagg, as agent for the proprietors, offers it for sale and describes it as "one of the most extensive and convenient Establishments in the State—is in perfect repair, and has all the accommodations and necessary Tools for carrying on the business in the most perfect manner. Through the middle of the yard runs a large Brook, which is confined within its banks by a very handsome stone-wall. Appertaining to the yard, is a decent, well-finished House, containing eight rooms—an excellent Garden, and a Well of good water. A few rods from the Tanyard is a building in which Bark is ground by water, and in which is a Patent Bark-Mill, strong and well-constructed. The situation is such as will command an extensive sale of Leather, and experience justifies the unqualified assurance, that a person who is acquainted with the business, who is attentive, judicious, and of good habits, and able to stock the yard, would acquire, by conducting the Establishment, a good estate."

4. Put History of Printing to Press.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>"The History of Printing in America" was Mr. Thomas's only literary work, and after his retirement from business in Worcester in 1802, he devoted himself largely to its preparation. He was peculiarly fitted to compile such a history, for from his own investigations and from his personal acquaintance with the leading printers of the United States, from whom he had heard their own histories and the traditions of their predecessors, his knowledge of the subject was greater than that of any one then living. He spared neither time nor expense in gathering material, and the collection of newspapers obtained for this purpose, with those he already possessed, was the largest in the country.

The work is dedicated to "The President and other Officers and Members of the AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY in Pennsylvania, and The President, Counsellors, and other members of the AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ARTS AND SCIENCES in Massachusetts."

In the preface he says:—

"Amidst the darkness which surrounds the discovery of many of the arts, it has been ascertained that it is practicable to trace the introduction and progress of Printing, in the northern part of America, to the period of the revolution. A history of this kind has not, until now, been attempted, although the subject, in one point of view, is more interesting to us than to any other nation. We are able to convey to posterity a correct account of the manner in which we have grown up to be an independent people, and can delineate the progress of the useful and polite arts among us with a degree of certainty which cannot be attained by the nations of the old world, in respect to themselves.

"I am sensible that a work of this kind might, in other hands, have been rendered more interesting. It has a long time been the wish of many, that some person distinguished for literature would bring it forward; but, as no one has appeared who was disposed to render this service to the republic of letters, the partiality of some of my friends led them to entertain the opinion, that my long acquaintance with Printing must have afforded me a knowledge of many interesting facts, and pointed out the way for further inquiry, and that, therefore, I should assume the undertaking. Thus I have been, perhaps too easily, led to engage in a task which has proved more arduous than I had previously apprehended; and which has been attended with much expense.

"It is true, that in the course of fifty years, during which I have been intimately connected with the art, I became acquainted with many of its respectable professors; some of whom had, long before me, been engaged in business. From them I received information respecting the transactions and events which occurred in their own time, and also concerning those, of which they received the details from their predecessors. By these means I have been enabled to record many circumstances and events, which must soon have been buried in oblivion. My long acquaintance with printing, and the researches I made in several of the colonies before the revolution, certainly afforded me no inconsiderable aid in this undertaking; and, to this advantage, I may add, and I do it with sincere and grateful acknowledgments, that I have received the most friendly attention to my inquiries from gentlemen in different parts of the United States.

“Yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, I have experienced much difficulty in collecting, through this extensive country, the facts which relate to the introduction of the art of Printing in the several states. These facts were all to be sought for, and the inquiry after them had so long been neglected that the greater part of them would soon have passed beyond the reach of our researches. Most of the printers mentioned in these volumes have long since been numbered with the dead, and of whom many were but little known while living; yet, the essential circumstances respecting them, as connected with the art, will, I believe, be found in the following pages; although I cannot flatter myself that they will be entirely free from unintentional errors or omissions.

“The history of printing in America, I have brought down to the most important event in the annals of our country—the Revolution. To have continued it beyond this period, all will admit would have been superfluous.”

In 1874 a second edition, following generally omissions and alterations in the text made by Mr. Thomas, was published by the American Antiquarian Society.

20. Thermometer 10 degrees below 0. The cold was excessive from one end of the United States to the other. The wind so forcible as in some places to unroof houses. Some barns were blown down, &c. Boston harbor frozen over. Several persons died with the spotted fever<sup>1</sup> at Dana, in this county.

<sup>1</sup>This was an epidemic cerebro-spinal meningitis, an acute infectious disease, and a form of the genuine meningitis, which has prevailed more extensively in this country than in any other part of the civilized world. There have been three very distinct epidemics of this disease in this country and in Europe. The first of which we have any accurate description, continued through the entire first quarter of the nineteenth century, with temporal intermissions of one or more years, and spread over the New England states and the middle Atlantic seaboard, reaching inland as far, apparently, as any considerable civilization had progressed. Then for about fifteen years there was a cessation of activity until, in 1840, it broke out again in the West and South, and for the next six years there were intermittent limited epidemics. The third started ten years later, reached its height during the Civil War, and did not subside until ten years after its close.

It first appeared in Medford, Mass., in March, 1806, but the number of cases was small, and it did not spread so as to attract attention until the following spring, when it appeared in Hartford, Conn., and other places on the Connecticut River, and in Williamstown, Mass. For several years the disease reappeared in this way, disappearing in the summer, and returning late in the winter and spring, and becoming each year more extensive and destructive, until 1813, when it rapidly diminished. Strangely enough it avoided the large towns, both on the seacoast and in the interior, and seemed to attack the healthy and vigorous, rather than those who would be naturally susceptible to it, and the proportion of cases and of deaths was much greater among adults of mature age, sound health and temperate and regular habits.

In 1810, the rapid spread of the disease in Massachusetts, and especially in Worcester County, became so alarming, that in March the Massachusetts Medical Society determined to take the matter up, and sent circular letters to the different physicians in the state, containing questions as to the nature, development and treatment of the disease, and asking them to make weekly reports of the cases under their observation, to enable the society to publish descriptions as a guide to physicians. All these descriptions made special mention of the eruption (spotted fever), as well as the nervous phenomena of the disease. Its appearance was generally sudden and violent, and in its course all the functions of the body were more or less interrupted, and often some of them were entirely suspended. The subject would be seized in the midst of his usual occupation, and would often be struck down suddenly, almost as by a stroke of lightning. The first symptoms were various, such as local pain or paralysis, delirium or coma, but there were rarely spasms or convulsions. Among the varieties of the disease, the following is a description of some cases common, especially among women: "Universal deadly coldness; skin white as polished marble and smooth; countenance perfectly placid; not one distorted muscle; pulse in the wrist imperceptible; motion of the heart scarcely to be felt; respiration visible only by gasping and that not frequent; and as it were only a step between this imperfect state of life and death."

Dr. Oliver Fiske gives another report of a case in Worcester:—

"Of T. S. about 30 years of age; of a sanguine temperament and lax fibre—has been subject to typhus almost yearly since he was fourteen years of age, when he had cynanche scarlatina very severely.

"While at work he was seized suddenly with pain in one finger, resembling the sting of a bee; this pain darted with the rapidity of lightning from joint to joint, until it had passed over all his limbs; it then gave him one general shock like electricity, which he had often experienced; at which moment he was deprived of sight, and felt a sudden faintness and sickness at stomach, with indescribable distress. In this situation he was carried into the house. The pain soon became more confined to his head, occasionally visiting the breast, stomach and extremities, but was less pungent than at first. Pupils much dilated with a wild, penetrating stare; pulse languid and irregular; and great prostration of strength. Reaction was produced with great difficulty. Submuriate of quicksilver was administered, and the mouth was affected on the third day. On the fourth he had an injection. On the fifth he was decidedly convalescent; the vital functions however were restored by almost imperceptible degrees; he could not be moved, except from one side of the bed to the other, until the ninth day.—After that his recovery was more rapid."

At the first appearance of the disease in Worcester County, a large proportion of those affected died at an early period, but after it extended more widely, its violence diminished, and the proportion of deaths became very small.

<sup>1</sup> This house, which stood on the south corner of Main and Mechanic streets, was the site of the first tavern in Worcester, built in 1719, by Captain Moses Rice, of Sudbury, and kept by him until his removal to Rutland in 1742. The property then passed into the hands of John Chandler, the Refugee, who converted it into an estate called the "Homestead," building upon it a mansion, in which he lived until his banishment. It was later assigned to Mrs. Chandler, as a part of her dower, and in 1785 was bought by Major Ephraim Mower, and the mansion was converted into the "Sun Tavern," which was occupied by him, and by his nephew of the same name, until 1818. It was then removed to the north side of Mechanic street, and the "United States Hotel" was built upon the original site, by William Hovey.

<sup>1</sup> In 1789, the members of the Second Parish considered the erection of a church to be an actual necessity, and Dr. Bancroft, realizing that the society, in the existing conditions of the times, could not do this and at the same time pay him the full amount of his salary of five hundred dollars, small as it was, voluntarily relinquished one-third part of it until the building should be completed, on the conditions that the church should be built at once, and that the parish should become bound for the prompt payment of the remainder.

To maintain a household on this sum was impossible, and although matters moved a little more smoothly after the completion of the church, which was dedicated 1 January, 1792, he found that his salary was not sufficient to meet the needs of his large and growing family.

In his sermon preached at the termination of fifty years of his ministry, in 1836, he says of the trials and struggles of these early years: "My income from the parish being quite inadequate to the support of a family, I was obliged to have recourse to extraneous means. We for years received as many boarders as our house would accommodate. I assisted several youth in their preparation for college, or qualifying themselves for useful stations in busy life; through a long period I admitted in the forenoons of week days a number of the daughters and relatives of parishioners into my study, and gave them the best instruction in my power. The publication of Washington's Life yielded some profit; during several years I officiated as editor of one or another of our publick journals.

"During the continental war in Europe, necessary articles rose immoderately in price, and with my means the family could not be supported. In a conference with assembled numbers of the society this fact was declared, and they were informed that I had eneroached on the small capital bequeathed to my wife by her father. The appeal was not made in vain. Individuals were liberal in sending to our house articles of consumption, and in the seven following years I received by special grants, in addition to the annual salary, $900. In 1816, $300 was added to the salary, which was continued till the settlement of a colleague, when at my instance the salary was reduced to $500, the original amount."

good student, and spent much of his time in the printing office of Mr. Thomas, where he acquired considerable skill as a typesetter.

At the outbreak of the Revolution he was in his fifteenth year, and on the day of the battle of Lexington, he followed the troops to Cambridge, with several boys of his age, intending to return with them. But before night all communication with Boston was cut off, and having no means of providing for themselves, they became waiters or errand boys to the officers. After more than three months of this life Russell, with two or three soldiers, was carrying provisions to General Putnam's headquarters on Prospect Hill, when he met his father and one of his uncles in a chaise, and he said in later years, "My father jumped from the chaise and gave me the hardest flogging I ever had." He was then taken into the chaise, carried to Worcester and apprenticed to Mr. Thomas.

During the first year or two that he was in Worcester, Mr. Thomas was so poor that his apprentices slept in a garret over the printing office, on the rags taken in for the paper-maker, and he often made his meals with them in the office, on bread and "milk bought by the penny-worth at a time."

The apprentices sometimes wrote paragraphs for the paper, and put them under the door of the office, not caring to be known as "scribblers" for a newspaper. One day Mr. Thomas found Russell correcting an article of his own, and reprimanded him severely, although the latter proved that the correction was much better than the original. Sometime later an article containing severe personal reflections on some of the Tories caused a good deal of excitement, and efforts were made to discover the writer. Russell at last confessed, but no reprimand followed.

When Mr. Thomas was drafted as a continental soldier, in 1780, Russell eagerly seized the opportunity of going as his substitute. He joined the army at West Point, and while there furnished the Massachusetts Spy with its war news. He saw no active service, but he was one of the guard that conducted André to the place of execution. At the end of six months he was honorably discharged, and returned to Worcester to serve out his time. When he was twenty, however, he insisted that his release was only a fair consideration for having acted as Mr. Thomas's substitute, and the latter reluctantly consented. He worked as a journeyman until November, 1783, when he became anxious to engage in business for himself, and having with great difficulty procured a little type, he issued, with William Warden, a proposal for the publication of The Massachusetts Centinel and the Re- publican Journal, the first number of which appeared 24 March, 1784. Two years later Warden died, and he continued the publication of the paper alone. In 1790 its name was changed to The Columbian Centinel.

Himself an able writer, Mr. Russell was aided by Stephen Higginson, John Lowell, Fisher Ames, Timothy Pickering and George Cabot, and the Centinel almost immediately became the leading Federalist paper in New England.

In 1788 Mr. Russell attended the Massachusetts convention for the ratification of the Constitution of the United States, and made the first attempt at reporting for any Boston newspaper. He was especially enterprising in collecting foreign news, and for this purpose he visited all the foreign vessels which entered Boston harbor. Regular files of the Moniteur were kept at the Centinel office, which frequently brought Louis Philippe and Talleyrand there when they were in Boston.

During the first session of Congress, when the country was almost bankrupt, Mr. Russell wrote to the Department of State, and offered to publish gratuitously all the laws and other official documents. They were accordingly sent to him and published "by authority." At the end of several years he was called upon for his bill, which was made out and receipted according to his pledge. Washington would not consent to this, saying: "This must not be. When Mr. Russell offered to publish the laws without pay we were poor. It was a generous offer. We are now able to pay our debts. This is a debt of honor and must be discharged." A few days later Mr. Russell received a check for seven thousand dollars.

Mr. Russell continued to be the sole editor of the Centinel until 1829, when he sold it to Joseph T. Adams and Thomas Hudson, and retired to private life.

Mr. Russell represented Boston in the General Court for twenty-four years, served several terms in the State Senate, was a member of the Executive Council and of the Constitutional Convention of 1820.

<sup>1</sup> Joseph Allen was the son of James Allen, a Boston merchant, and Mary Adams Allen, a sister of Samuel Adams. In 1770 he opened a store in Leicester, and while there was active in the preliminary movements of the Revolution. In 1776 he succeeded Levi Lincoln as clerk of the courts, and held that office until 1810. He removed to Worcester, and lived first in the James Putnam house at the corner of Main and Park streets. In a few years he built a house at the north corner of Main and School streets, and during the last years of his life he lived at the north corner of Main and Pearl streets. In 1810 he was chosen to the 11th Congress to fill out the unexpired term of Jabez Upham, but declined a re-election. From 1815 to 1818 he was a member of the Executive Council, was twice a presidential elector; and was one of the founders and the first treasurer of Leicester Academy.

Governor Lincoln, in his "Fire Society Reminiscences," says: "In personal appearance, neatness and appropriateness of attire, and suavity of address, as I recollect him, he was the very impersonation of the graces of the manners of the olden time. As I first saw him, in his official relation to the robed Judges on the Bench, with his cocked hat, and powdered hair, ruffled shirt-bosom and wristbands, velvet small clothes, and silver knee and shoe Buckles, it seemed to me, that there was a mysterious dignity about the Courts, which gave a sanctity to the very forms of Justice. To the impressiveness of his manner in performing the higher duties of the office of Clerk, no one could be insensible. The precision with which he impanelled a jury, the clearness and emphasis which he gave to the reading of important papers, the distinctness and solemnity with which he administered oaths, were peculiar excellencies in him, which, for their effect, I have never known approached even, by any other."

<sup>2</sup> It is supposed that this hall was built by Major Jedediah Healy, for the manufacture of coffins, as he was a cabinet-maker by trade, and the town sexton or undertaker for a number of years. It stood in the rear of the southerly part of the present Barnard Building, about twenty-five or thirty feet from the street, and was entered through a passageway between the house of James Wilson, the postmaster, and that of Mr. Healy, which was later the residence of Samuel M. Burnside. It was long the lodge-room of Morning Star Lodge, and after it ceased to be occupied for masonic purposes, was used for dances, lectures and other amusements, and later was the printing office of Henry J. Howland. It is described as being seventeen feet wide and about thirty-eight feet in length.

<sup>1</sup> William Stedman was graduated from Harvard in 1784, studied law in the office of Chief Justice Francis Dana, and was admitted to the bar, in Essex, in 1787. He opened an office in Lancaster, where he lived for many years, and had a large practice as a counsellor, but did not attain great success as an advocate. He represented Lancaster in the General Court in 1802, and was member of Congress from the Worcester North District from 1803 to 1810, when he declined a re-election. In the latter year he succeeded Joseph Allen as clerk of the courts, and removed to Worcester. In 1811, being a decided Federalist, he was removed by Governor Gerry, but was re-instated in the following summer by Governor Strong, and held the office until 1816. An easy and affable manner, and a great fund of ready wit, rendered him popular everywhere, and while in Washington he was a general favorite.

He lived in Worcester, first in the house which had been occupied by Isaiah Thomas, Jr., opposite the Court House, and then in the Elijah Dix house. After his retirement he returned to Lancaster, and the latter part of his life was spent in Newburyport.

Mr. Stedman married Almy, daughter of William Ellery, of Newport, R. I., one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

[Born, Cambridge, 20 January, 1765. Died, Newburyport, 31 August, 1831.]

3. Town granted the Centre district the amount of the highway tax of the district for two years, to rebuild and widen the Bridge by the Court house, the town other-ways to be at no expense towards that business.<sup>1</sup>

5. Court of Common Pleas sitting.

<sup>1</sup> At the town meeting, 5 November, 1810, Jeremiah Robinson, Theophilus Wheeler and others presented a petition, asking that the bridge at Lincoln square should be rebuilt or repaired, and the road by the jail widened, and that an appropriation be made for that purpose; and Benjamin Heywood, Thomas Nichols, John Totman, Edward Bangs, Samuel Brazer, Oliver Fiske and Nathan White were chosen a committee to report upon the matter. They reported at the meeting 3 December, 1810, that, "This bridge, in its present situation, consists of three narrow sluice ways, so low, that before the water can pass over the dam on the lower side of the Bridge, those sluice ways are compleatly filled up with dead water, and whenever there is a sudden increase (which frequently happens in the Spring of the year) the water must accumulate on the upper side and flow over it thereby greatly endangering the Bridge and discommoding the Inhabitants.

"The Committee are therefore fully of opinion, that both for the safety of the Town and convenience of the public travil it is indispensibly necessary this bridge should be taken up and rebuilt and raised so as to be nearly upon a level with the abutment at the end of the turnpike. That, to afford sufficient conveniency for the accomodation of the public, it will also be necessary to extend the Bridge further South so as to occasion the removal of the Hatters Shop now there and embrace a portion of Mr. Lincolns land. The terms upon which Mr. Lincoln will consent, as the Committee are informed to a removal of this shop and that a strip of land about two rods wide should be laid out into a public highway are as follows viz. That the shop shall — removed and fitted up in such a manner as shall be suitable for improvement. That the water shall be conveyed into the canal for the accomodation of the works below, either by constructing a dam of a sufficient heighth below the Bridge, or by extending the canal through, so as to receive the water on the North side, all which is to be at the expence of the Town, and that he shall be paid two hundred dollars for the land. The whole it is believed will amount to five hundred dollars, which added to the probable expence of rebuilding the Bridge will make nearly fifteen hundred dollars in the whole. This sum if raised by an additional tax upon the Inhabitants at large would impose so heavy a burden as to prove a discouragement to the undertaking."

The Committee therefore recommended that, as for several years the Centre School District had been assessed for about one-half of the annual highway tax of two thousand dollars, and as the roads in the other parts of the town were in good condition, the highway tax of that district for the next two years should be appropriated for rebuilding the bridge, provided that sufficient assurance should be given of its completion within that time. The report was accepted, and the same committee was chosen to complete the work.

<sup>1</sup>James Elliot, a self-educated man, had served under General Wayne in the northwestern campaigns of 1793-1796 as a non-commissioned officer. While preparing for the bar he was a clerk in a country store in Guilford, Vt., and contributed, both in prose and verse, to the Greenfield Gazette, Farmers' Museum, and other papers. After living for a short time in Philadelphia, where he edited the Freeman's Journal, he practised law in Brattleboro, Vt., and from 1803 to 1809 was a representative from that state.

In June, 1810, he announces in the National Aegis that he "has taken that excellently situated Office, some time since occupied by Levi Lincoln, Jr. Esq. near the Court House, and nearly opposite Col. Sikes' Stage Inn. He will attend at all hours, from 4 in the morning to 10 at night, and those who employ him may depend upon his industry. He has been admitted as an Attorney and Counsellor at the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, at the seat of government, and will appear in the Federal Courts if required."

In October, 1810, he leased the Massachusetts Spy of Isaiah Thomas, Jr., but his views were too mild to suit the Federalists of Worcester, and his bombastic style exposed him to so much ridicule, especially to that of Samuel Brazer, the editor of the Aegis, that Mr. Thomas was induced to rescind the agreement. Two days later Elliot issued the following circular:

POSTSCRIPT EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE

MASSACHUSETTS SPY!

SECOND EDITION.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, FEB. 20, 1811.

THE Subscriber has been notified by two agents of the Federal Committee, that a violent Trespass, not to say Robbery, will be committed upon his legal and equitable property in this establishment to-morrow. Should it take place, he may not be able to publish the Spy next week. But he pledges himself to the good People of this county, that he will sustain his rights in this establishment, at the expence of every cent of his property and every drop of his (blood) ink. And he humbly trusts in the goodness of his God for ample power to redeem this solemn pledge!

JAMES ELLIOT.

After leaving Worcester Mr. Elliot lived in Philadelphia and Putney, Vt., and after having served as a captain in the army for a short time, again became connected with the Freeman's Journal. In 1815 he removed to Brattleboro, Vt., and practised law, and afterwards held several important state offices.

He married, in 1803, Lucy, daughter of Moses Dow, of Haverhill.

<sup>1</sup> John Dunlap, as a young boy, went to live with an uncle, a Philadelphia printer, to whose business he succeeded at the age of eighteen, and became one of the most successful printers and editors of the country. In November, 1771, he began the publication of the Pennsylvania Packet, which was devoted to the patriot cause during the Revolution. From 1784 it was a daily paper, the first in the United States, and was afterwards known as The North American and U. S. Gazette. As printer to Congress, he first issued the "Declaration of Independence."

[Born, Strabane, Ireland, 1747. Died, Philadelphia, 27 November, 1812.]

<sup>2</sup> Christopher Gore, the son of John and Frances Pinckney Gore, of Boston, was graduated from Harvard in 1776, studied law with Judge Lowell, and acquired a large practice in Boston. He was a delegate to the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention in 1788, and served as the first district attorney for Massachusetts, from 1790 to 1796. He was then appointed commissioner to England, to settle the British spoliation claims, and remained in London eight years, during the last of which he was chargé d'affaires. On his return he served several years in the General Court; was governor of Massachusetts in 1809; United States senator from 1813 to 1816; and a presidential elector in the following year.

He made many gifts to Harvard during his lifetime, the law library being his especial care; and the college was made his residuary legatee. This devise, amounting to nearly one hundred thousand dollars, was the largest individual gift made to Harvard up to that time; and for this Gore Hall was named in his honor.

Governor Gore received the degree of LL.D. from Harvard in 1809. He was an overseer of the college from 1810 to 1815, and a fellow from 1812 to 1820; was president of the Massachusetts Historical Society from 1806 to 1808; a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; and a member of the American Antiquarian Society.

[Born, Boston, 21 September, 1758.

Died, Waltham, 1 March, 1829.]

Elbridge Gerry, the signer of the Declaration of Independence, after his graduation from Harvard, in 1762, entered business, and in a few years acquired a competent fortune. He early took an active part in the Revolution; was a member of the Committees of Correspondence and Safety; represented Marblehead in the Provincial House of Representatives from 1772 to 1775; and was the first to propose, in the Provincial Congress, a law for the encouragement of fitting out armed vessels, and the establishment of a Court of Admiralty. He was a delegate to the Continental Congress from 1776 to 1780 and from 1783 to 1785; a member of the convention for framing the Constitution in 1787, but was one of those who refused to sign it, on the ground that too great powers were delegated to the national government; and a representative in Congress from 1789 to 1793. In 1797 he was appointed an envoy to France with Pinckney and Marshall, for the object of preserving peace. In 1799 and 1801 he was the unsuccessful candidate of the Democratic party for governor of Massachusetts, but was elected in 1810, after a bitter struggle. He was defeated again in 1812, and in the same year was chosen vice-president of the United States.

twenty-five. The first officers were: James Sullivan, President; Thomas Walcutt, Recording Secretary; Jeremy Belknap, Corresponding Secretary; William Tudor, Treasurer; and John Eliot, Librarian. The first meetings were held in Judge Minot's office on Spring lane, but the use of a corner room in the attic of Faneuil Hall was soon obtained, and in 1791 the society removed to the Manufactory House, then occupied by the Massachusetts Bank, on Long Acre (Tremont) street, where Hamilton place now is. From 1793 to 1833 it had a room in the Tontine Crescent, on the south side of Franklin street.

The collections of the society, which are now of inestimable value, were originally published in a weekly periodical, called the American Apollo, but after nine months they were issued monthly and then collected into volumes. After 1799 they were published only in volumes, at intervals of about two years.

<sup>1</sup> Dwight Foster, the son of Jedediah and Dorothy Dwight Foster, of Brookfield, was graduated from Brown in 1774, at the age of seventeen, and studied law with Joseph Hawley, in Northampton. After his admission to the bar, in 1780, he opened an office in Providence, but soon removed to Brookfield, where a better opportunity was offered to him to begin his professional life, as at that time he was the only lawyer within a radius of twenty miles. In 1779 his father was chosen a delegate to the convention for framing the constitution, but died before that body met, and Dwight served in his stead. He was a member of both branches of the General Court, and of the Council of Massachusetts, and for ten years was chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas. In 1792 he was elected sheriff of Worcester County, and in the same year was an elector of President and Vice-President. He was a representative to Congress from 1793 to 1800, when he was chosen to fill the vacancy in the Senate caused by the resignation of Samuel Dexter. His term of service in Congress was during a period of great moment to the country, when the political parties were beginning to be formed on definite lines of policy. He was prominent among the leaders of the Federal party, and occasionally took part in the Congressional debates, his first speech being an attack on Madison's commercial resolutions in 1794. He retired from public life in 1803.

Judge Foster married, in 1783, Rebecca, daughter of Colonel Faulkner, of Acton. [Born, Brookfield, 7 December, 1757. Died, Brookfield, 29 April, 1823.]

<sup>2</sup> Elijah Brigham, of Westborough, was graduated from Dartmouth in 1778, and studied law, but never practised, and was engaged in mercantile pursuits for some years. He served in both branches of the General Court, twelve years as senator; was two years a councillor, and a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, from 1795 until its abolition in 1811. He was a member of Congress from 1811 to his death in 1816. An earnest partisan, he was bitterly opposed to the War of 1812, voting in Congress with the minority on all important questions, and his name appears upon the protest against the war, in June, 1812.

[Born, Northborough, 7 July, 1751. Died, Washington, 22 February, 1816.]

18. Went to Bank. Blanchard worked for Dr. Green.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Dr. John Green the third, the son of John and Nancy Barber Green, was graduated from Brown in 1804, and studied medicine with his father, to whose large practice he succeeded in 1808. He never held any public office, but for nearly fifty years his time was devoted almost entirely to his professional duties, and there was no more familiar figure than his in Worcester and the surrounding country. "In village, town and county," says Judge Thomas ('Fire Society Reminiscences'), "the name of Dr. John Green became a household word. For many years he was by general consent, at the head of his profession in the county.

"Most of the present members will recollect Dr. Green, his slight and stooping figure, his striking intelligent face, his keen, observing eye, his quiet, simple, almost diffident manner. Not to have seen him as under that brown, broad-brimmed soft hat, he rolled from side to side in that old time-honored gig, through the streets of the village, town and city, was to have missed one of the most striking institutions of Worcester. To have seen him in the sickroom, when, seemingly failing to observe, nothing escaped his observation, when his calm, quiet manner, begat instant confidence and trust, when his instinctive sagacity seemed to probe the disease as with the keen edge of the lance, was a benediction."

But it is as the founder of the Free Public Library that Dr. Green will be best known to posterity. He had early formed the purpose of devoting a liberal portion of his fortune for such an institution, and his library was selected with this object in view. His knowledge of books, as of medicine, seemed intuitive, and in their choice he relied on his own judgment, which was unailing and marked by the utmost catholicity, never however losing sight of the fact that it was to be a public library and should be so constructed as to be of the greatest use to the public. His three objects in forming it seemed to be utility, variety and completeness, and he looked for the books which were rare and not easily attainable, lest they could not be obtained in the future. At the time of its formal transfer to the city, 27 December, 1859, the library consisted of about seven thousand volumes. Before his death he added about five thousand more, and by his will left thirty thousand dollars for a separate fund, which, with future accumulations, was to be known as the "Green Library Fund."

Dr. Green received the degree of M.D. from Harvard in 1815, and from Brown in 1826. Of the District Medical Society he was three years treasurer, seven librarian, five vice-president and seven president; vice-president of the American Medical Society in 1854; the first president of the Worcester County Horticultural Society; and a councillor of the Massachusetts Medical Society and the American Antiquarian Society.

Dr. Green married, in 1823, Dolly, daughter of David and Susannah Stone Curtis, of Worcester, whom he long survived.

5. Charles Ewers<sup>1</sup> came from Boston.

<sup>1</sup>Charles Ewer, the son of Captain Silas Ewer, an old sea captain of Boston, was apprenticed to Trott and Bumstead, dealers in English dry goods, for a time, and then entered the wholesale store of Pratt and Andrews. At the close of the War of 1812 he purchased the bookstore of Isaiah Thomas, Jr., in Newburyport, but business being in a depressed state, he soon went to Portsmouth, N. H. On the death of his mother, in 1816, he returned to Boston to care for his two sisters, and opened a bookstore at 51 Cornhill. Four years later, with Timothy Bedlington, he purchased the stock of books of Thomas & Andrews; but this venture was not so successful as he had anticipated, and involved him in financial embarrassments, which resulted in his failure in 1829. He then devoted himself to public improvements in Boston, and projected and carried out the development of the property adjoining Washington and Avon streets, and of the South Cove. He was the originator and first president of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

<sup>2</sup> George Augustus Trumbull, the only child of Joseph and Elizabeth Paine Trumbull, came to Worcester with his parents about the year 1803, and in April, 1813, bought the bookstore of Isaiah Thomas, Jr., "two doors north of Col. Sikes' Inn." (Exchange Hotel.) He later removed to the old Thomas store on Court Hill, where he remained until August, 1823, when he was succeeded by Clarendon Harris. From 1819 to 1823 he published the Massachusetts Spy in partnership with William Manning. In October, 1822, Mr. Trumbull and Samuel Ward, under the heading "STRONG BEER," inform the public "that a BREWERY is now erecting in Worcester, and will go into operation this season.—As the expense will be very considerable, and the Subscribers determine not to offer any Beer for sale, but of the first quality, the good people of this County particularly are requested to patronize this Establishment." The brewery was a large building at the corner of Grafton and Water streets, and was capable of making yearly three thousand barrels of beer or ale. 31 December, 1828, Mr. Trumbull became the sole proprietor, and in the following October sold the property to Simeon Burt.

Mr. Trumbull was the cashier of the Central Bank from its incorporation in 1829 to 1836, when he resigned to become the first cashier of the Citizens Bank, a position he held until 1858.

Mr. Paine was graduated from Harvard in 1748, and immediately entered the public service. He was clerk of the courts from 1751 to 1774; register of probate from 1757 to 1767; register of deeds from 1761 to 1775; member of the Executive Council of the Province from 1766 to 1773; selectman from 1753 to 1763, and from 1766 to 1775; town clerk from 1754 to 1764; and representative from 1755 to 1757, 1759, 1762, 1788 and 1789.

In 1774, on his receiving a commission as one of His Majesty's Mandamus Councillors, the people were determined to prevent him from serving, and the Committee of Correspondence summoned the friends of liberty in the neighboring towns to appear in Worcester. Early in the morning of 22 August companies, which with the citizens of Worcester numbered more than three thousand, marched into town in military order, but without arms, and formed in lines on the Common. A committee, consisting of two or three from each company, waited on Mr. Paine, and demanded his resignation, and he readily complied. While this was considered satisfactory, the people required Mr. Paine's presence to confirm it, and he was compelled to walk through the ranks, which now lined both sides of the street from the Court House to the Old South Church, and to hear his acknowledgment read at different places, as they passed along.

Madame Paine, as she was always called, was as ardent a Tory as her husband, and is spoken of as a woman of uncommon energy and acuteness, and noted for her zeal in defending the Royalist cause. She would suffer no indignity to the King in her presence, and many stories are told of her wit and repartee on trying occasions. At one time, when the Court and Bar were dining with them, Mr. Paine proposed as a toast "The King." Some of the Whigs were about to refuse to drink it, when John Adams, who was one of the guests, whispered to them to comply, saying they would soon have an opportunity to return the compliment. When Mr. Adams's turn came he gave as his toast "The Devil." As Mr. Paine was about to resent this insult his wife calmed him, and immediately exclaimed, "My dear! As the gentleman has been so kind as to drink to our King, let us by no means refuse, in our turn, to drink to his."

The Paines lived, until a short time before the Revolution, in the house which is still standing at the lower part of Lincoln street, in the door of which Madame Paine is said to have stood, when the Whig soldiers came to seize her husband, saying that they should not enter the house, except over her prostrate body. They then removed to "The Oaks," which has been occupied by their descendants to the present time.

24. Paid Misses Waldo<sup>1</sup> interest for 6 months on note for 666 dols due in November.

26. Mrs. Seaver visit. Finished Stone arch at the head of the Bridge.

27. Went to Chh. twice.

29. Went to the bank.

30. Mrs. Seaver went home. A number of persons turned out and employed 12 teams in carting gravel on the bridge, and to help in filling up the Square formed by taking the sides of the brook. They carted 317 loads—My Computation is that 2200 loads of Earth, 20 square feet to a load, are necessary to level the Square—about 1200 loads have now been carted—and I think 100[0] more to complete the work.

31. Appraised Mr. and Mrs. Waldo's Estates.

November, 1811.

3. Neither of the Churches were opened today; both ministers being absent.

5. A number of persons, with 10 teams, volunteered in filling up the ground, near the bridge—carted in 270 loads. Dismissed Levi.

8. This day the workmen completed laying the covering Stones of the bridge.

<sup>1</sup> Theophilus Wheeler, the son of Rev. Joseph and Mary Greenleaf Wheeler, of Harvard, Mass., removed to Worcester with his parents at the age of seventeen, and was a clerk in the office of his father, who was then register of probate. After the latter's death in 1793, he succeeded him, and held the office until 1836. He was town clerk from 1787 to 1792; town treasurer in 1799 and 1800; overseer of schools in 1823, and of the House of Correction in 1826. He was one of the first directors of the Worcester Bank, serving in that capacity for eighteen years, and the first treasurer of the Worcester Agricultural Society.

Mr. Wheeler lived in the house built by his father, north of the Exchange Hotel. He married, 4 April, 1790, Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph and Mary Lemmon Lynde.

<sup>1</sup>George Frederick Cooke, a celebrated English actor, began his professional career as a member of a company of itinerant actors, and acquired so much fame in York, Manchester, Liverpool and other places that in 1794 he was engaged by the manager of the Dublin Theatre for a year. His season there was so successful that he returned in 1797, and remained for three years. His appearance at Covent Garden in the autumn of 1800, in the character of Richard III., immediately established his reputation as an actor, and he took the parts of Iago, Macbeth, Shylock, Sir Giles Overreach, Sir Pertinax Maesyepphant and others, with equal success. A sort of rivalry grew up between him and John Philip Kemble, who was then playing at Drury Lane, and their comparative merits in the character of Richard III. caused considerable literary controversy. They later appeared together at Covent Garden. Cooke's intemperate habits, however, ultimately destroyed his popularity, and he formed a theatrical engagement in the United States, where for a time he displayed the same powerful abilities. But the same weakness again impaired his powers, and hastened his death, which occurred 25 March, 1812.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Thomas had intended to make this catalogue of books printed in the English colonies previous to the Revolution a part of the "History of Printing," but finding that it would enlarge that work to another volume, its publication was deferred, and it was never finished by him. He left to the American Antiquarian Society several memorandum books and a number of loose sheets containing the titles of books, collected mainly from newspapers and catalogues, which he had attempted to arrange alphabetically under their places of publication, "the result," as he states, "of many months research."

Before the breaking out of the Civil War, the work of copying and re-arranging these titles, and the addition of others was undertaken by Dr. Samuel Foster Haven, Jr., who completed a card catalogue of them. Before it was made ready for publication, however, Dr. Haven enlisted in the 15th Massachusetts regiment, and was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg. This catalogue as left by him, without <sup>1</sup> Benjamin Heywood, the son of Phineas Heywood, of Shrewsbury, after serving an apprenticeship to a housewright, began business as a carpenter, but relinquishing this in two or three years, he prepared for college, and entered Harvard in 1771. As ensign of the Marti-Mercurian band of students, he took part in the battle of Lexington, after which the senior class did not return to Cambridge, although they received their degrees. He immediately enlisted, was promoted to the rank of captain in 1776, and was soon appointed paymaster to Colonel Nixon's regiment. He served through the Revolution, and when at its close a serious revolt of the soldiers was feared, on account of the inability of Congress to pay them, he was one of a committee appointed by Washington to consider and recommend the proper measures to be taken; and later was on the committee to adjust the accounts of the officers and soldiers of the Massachusetts line. After the army was disbanded, he was retained for some months in the office of the general superintendent. He then returned to Shrewsbury, but in a few years removed to Worcester and purchased a large farm, a portion of which is still in the possession of his descendants.

From 1802 to 1811 Mr. Heywood was a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, being the last judge of any of the higher courts of the county who was not educated for the legal profession; was twice an elector of President and Vice-President; was for many years an acting magistrate of the county; and a trustee of Leicester Academy. Mr. Heywood married Mehitable, daughter of Elisha Goddard, of Sutton.

[Born, Shrewsbury, 25 October, 1746. Died, Worcester, 6 December, 1816.]

<sup>2</sup> Samuel MacGregor Burnside, the son of Thomas Burnside, of Northumberland, N. H., a frontiersman who had served in the French and Indian wars and the Revolution, received his early education in the common schools of New Hampshire, and was graduated from Dartmouth in 1805. For two years he was the preceptor of a female academy in Andover, Mass., and then studied law with Artemas Ward, so long the chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas, who was then practising in Charlestown. Court without having, as was the usual rule, been previously sworn at the bar of the Common Pleas, and opened an office in Westborough in March of that year, but in the following September removed to Worcester.

He was a well-read lawyer, and had a high reputation for learning, not only in his profession but in the classics and theology. He was also deeply interested in the common school question, was for many years a member of the school committee and a trustee of Leicester Academy. He was closely identified with this society, being successively recording secretary, corresponding secretary, librarian, and a counsellor from 1823 to 1850.

Mr. Burnside married, 8 October, 1816, Sophia Dwight, daughter of Dwight and Rebecca Faulkner Foster, of Brookfield.

[Born, Northumberland, N. H., 18 July, 1783. Died, Worcester, 25 July, 1850.]

<sup>1</sup> Nathaniel Maccarty, the twelfth child of Rev. Thaddeus and Mary Gatecomb Maccarty, was an apprentice to Mr. Thomas, and was for some time employed by him as a post rider between Worcester and Fitchburg. Having afterwards acquired a competent fortune as a trader in Petersham, he returned to Worcester, and lived in one of the stateliest houses in the town, where Brinley Hall later stood.

His first wife was Mary Cook, who died 13 January, 1821, and he is said to have felt her death extremely, for he said, "he never expected to find any one again who would put down his winter's pork to suit him as she had done." He married a second time, 8 May, 1822, Rebecca, daughter of Henry Smith, of Boston. Mr. Maccarty was for some years the treasurer of the American Antiquarian Society.

[Born, Worcester, 10 July, 1758. Died, Worcester, 14 October, 1831.]

<sup>2</sup> Joseph Trumbull, the son of Joseph and Obedience Belden Trumbull, of Suffield, Conn., came to Worcester in June, 1778, and opened a store for general merchandise, a little north of the jail, which then stood at the lower end of Lincoln street. In December, 1779, he bought of Levi Shepard and Ebenezer Hunt, for five hundred pounds, "one half of a Certain Apothecary Shop in Worcester, standing upon a part of a Lott formerly belonging to Luke Brown," and the land upon which

Mr. Thomas retired from the firm in the spring of 1781. 9 December, 1783, Dr. Trumbull bought the other half of the shop, which had evidently been the share of Dr. Paine, of the committee for the sale of confiscated estates, for forty pounds; and in the following month conveyed the whole to Abraham Lincoln.

After this he was a physician in Petersham for a number of years, and in 1787-8 and 1791-2, he was licensed as a retailer of spirituous liquors in that town, having been recommended by the selectmen as "a person of sober life and conversation, suitably qualified & provided for the exercise of such an employment, & firmly attached to the Constitution & Laws of this Commonwealth." He seems however to have been in business in Worcester for a portion of the time that he lived in Petersham. for in July, 1793, he "presents his respects to the Physicians, his former customers, and others, informs them that he has opened a Medicinal Store, near Mr. Heywood's Tavern [the Central Hotel, where the Bay State House now stands], in Worcester."

About the year 1803, he returned to Worcester, and lived in the old Court House, which had been removed from Court Hill, to what is now Trumbull square, at the head of Green street.

In later life Dr. Trumbull was a victim of the gout, which confined him to his chair for seventeen years, and prevented him from engaging in active professional life. His marriage, 14 February, 1786, to Elizabeth, daughter of Timothy and Sarah Chandler Paine, was the first to take place in the Church of the Second Parish.

<sup>3</sup>In June, 1784, the Court of Sessions appointed a committee to consider the expediency of building a new jail in Worcester; and in December, the clerk was directed to present a petition to the General Court, setting forth the insufficiency and unhealthfulness of the present jail, and "praying that Government would grant to said County for the use of a public Goal, that part of the estate lately belonging to John Chandler, Esqr. an Absentee, & which has lately been confiscated to the Commonwealth," the bounds being described as "beginning at Timothy Bigelow's corner by the County road near the brook, called Swift river." This petition was granted, and the sum of five hundred pounds was appropriated for the building. The court accepted a plan submitted by Levi Lincoln, who, with Joseph Allen and Samuel Bridge, formed the committee for procuring the necessary materials; and in March, 1786, Levi Lincoln, Joseph Allen, Samuel Bridge, Timothy Paine and Joseph Wheeler were appointed to superintend its construction. It was completed in the autumn of 1788, and was a "structure of massive granite" from Millstone hill, sixty-four by thirty-two feet, and three stories in height. It was a work of considerable importance for the time, and Morse's "American Gazetteer," in 1797, describes the public buildings of Worcester, as consisting of two congregational churches, a court house and a strong stone jail.

Mr. Thomas says, in the Massachusetts Spy, of 4 September, 1788: "On Saturday last was completed the stone work of the new gaol in this town. This is judged to be at least the second stone building of consequence in this Commonwealth—none being thought superior except the Stone Chapel in Boston—that is built of hewn stone, the stone of this are mostly as they were taken from the quarry. The Committee who had the superintending of the building, merit the thanks of the county, for the care, attention, and great economy with which they have conducted the business—the master workman, Mr. John Parks, of Groton, has acquired great credit for the fidelity and ingenuity with which he has executed the work. The want of such a building has long been a cause of complaint, and the repairs of the old one were a constant bill of expense to the county. A great saving must be experienced from the new building, as, without some convulsion of Nature, it is not probable that it will need any repairs, excepting the roof, for two or three centuries. The benevolent heart has often been wounded at the sight of a number of our unfortunate brethren, whose lot it hath been to suffer confinement in the old gaol, where they experienced every inconvenience from the want of room, the stench of vaults, and confined air. Those hereafter, whose hard fortune may compel them to be dwellers in the new prison of this county, will not suffer such inconveniences;—even the criminal prisoner is entitled to our humanity, and more so him, whose only fault may be, that he cannot comply with the demand of his creditor, when he saith, 'pay me what thou owest.'—As by a late law of this Commonwealth every county is obliged to provide a work house, the capaciousness of this building will answer also for that purpose, and prevent the county the expense of erecting one."

The jail was at the easterly corner of Lincoln square and the present Union street, where the Court Mills later stood. The lower floor was for criminals, and was divided into four arches crosswise, forming four rooms; the second, divided in the same manner, but not arched, was for debtors who did not have "the liberty of the yard," and for prisoners for petty offences; and the third, which had an entry or walk from end to end, and contained eight rooms, was for the debtors who had the liberty of the jail yard. To the east of the jail, and separated from it by the yard, was the jailor's house, or "Jail Tavern," which was also the property of the county, and described as a handsome well-finished building. This building in turn proving too small in a few years, in 1819 a house of correction was built on Summer street, a part of which was appropriated for the county jail, in April, 1835.

<sup>1</sup> Levi Lincoln, the eldest son of Levi and Martha Waldo Lincoln, was graduated from Harvard in 1802, studied law in his father's office, and was admitted to the bar of the Court of Common Pleas, in Worcester, in 1805. After practising for the required term of two years in that court, he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Judicial Court, as attorney, and two years later became a counsellor. His zeal and energy in his profession, and the skill and judgment with which he conducted his cases, placed him in a few years among the leaders at the bar.

Entering political life at an early age, his advance was rapid from the first. From 1812 to 1814 he was in the State Senate, and he had already become so well known, that immediately after his election, he was selected to prepare the usual formal answer to the speech of the governor, who had been elected by the Federal party. From 1814 to 1822 inclusive, he represented Worcester in the General Court, with the exception of three years, in which he declined to serve, and in the last year was its speaker, although the majority of that body and the governor were of the opposite party. When he entered the House he found himself in a minority, at a time when party excitement was perhaps more intense than ever before or since. A warm supporter of the administration in its measures which resulted in the war with Great Britain, he vigorously protested against the participation of Massachusetts in the Hartford Convention, in December, 1814, and was the author of the famous protest of the minority of the House, signed by seventy-six of its members, which was published and circulated throughout the country, and gained for him a national reputation. When, on account of the separation of Maine from Massachusetts, in 1820, it became necessary to amend or modify her constitution, Mr. Lincoln was a member of the convention called for that purpose, took an active part in its discussions, and proved himself an able debater, never hesitating to express and defend his opinions; and some of the wisest changes made in the state constitution were largely due to his liberal doctrines and measures. When William Eustis succeeded Governor Brooks, in 1823, Mr. Lincoln was chosen lieutenant-governor; and in February, 1824, Governor Eustis appointed him to the bench of the Supreme Court. In the re-formation of parties which took place after the election of John Quincy Adams to the presidency, Mr. Lincoln became the leader of the National Republicans, the organization which later became so renowned under the name of the Whig party; and on the death of Governor Eustis, in February, 1825, the two parties in Massachusetts seem to have agreed to come together, and support some one man for the office. Mr. Lincoln declined to be a candidate on a Democratic nomination, because he was unwilling to stand in the way of the unanimous action of both parties; whereupon the Federal convention voted that it was inexpedient to make a party nomination, and upon a ballot for the office of governor, Mr. Lincoln received a unanimous vote, and at the ensuing election thirty-five thousand, out of thirty-seven thousand votes, were cast for him.

He was governor of Massachusetts for nine years in succession, an unparalleled term in our history, and his administration was one of the most prosperous that the state has ever known, and one in which many important questions were brought forward. At its beginning the subject of internal communication between Boston and the Connecticut River was occupying much of the public attention. He took an active interest in these projects, and while favoring the advocates of a canal, to whom he had partially committed himself, he did not allow his own opinions to stand in the way of the railroad party; and in 1828 he was placed at the head of the newly created Board of Internal Improvements, under the advice and encouragement of which, a system of railroads was adopted. The betterment of the conditions then existing in the state prison; the reforms in the treatment and management of the prisoners, and the establishment of the system of separate confinement; the improvement in the care of the insane and the founding of a state lunatic hospital; popular education and the normal school system,—were among the reforms inaugurated during his term of office. He was also the first governor of the state to exercise the right of veto, which had been given to the executive by the constitution of 1780. On his retirement in 1834, John Davis became governor of Massachusetts, and Governor Lincoln was elected to fill the vacancy in Congress caused by the resignation of Mr. Davis; and remained there by successive elections until 1841. When the Whigs came into power in the latter year, he succeeded George Bancroft as collector of the port of Boston, and his removal from this position by President Tyler, in the latter part of 1843, was the only time that he left an office involuntarily. For the next two years he was in the State Senate, and in 1845 was its president. In 1848 he was chosen the first mayor of Worcester, which was the last public office he held. In 1824, 1848 and 1864 he was a member of the electoral college, and in 1848 presided over that body. Governor Lincoln was also active in many societies and local institutions. He was greatly interested in agriculture, and was president of the Worcester Agricultural Society from 1824 to 1852; was one of the founders of the American Antiquarian Society, of which he was councillor from 1817 to 1854 and vice-president from 1854 to 1868; a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and of the board of overseers of Harvard College from 1825 to 1852. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by Williams in 1824, and by Harvard in 1826. Governor Lincoln married, 6 September, 1807, Penelope Winslow, daughter of William and Mary Chandler Sever. For a short time he lived in the Timothy Paine house on Lincoln street, then in the John Chandler house at Lincoln square, and removed to his new mansion on Main street, about the year 1813. In the early thirties, when the increasing growth of the town caused him to give this up, he built the present family mansion on Elm street, living for two years, until this was finished, in the house so long occupied by George W. Richardson, on the same street.

<sup>3</sup> After the re-election of Governor Gerry, in 1811, the Federalists were soon made to feel that the control of the state had passed into other hands; and one of the first acts of the General Court, now again Democratic in both branches, was to grant a charter to the "State Bank," the first bank in Massachusetts to be under the control of that party. It was to be the financial agent of the state, and thus off-set the two banks already existing in Boston, which were conducted by the Federalists. The Federalists then offered to pay one hundred thousand dollars for a charter precisely similar, so the Democrats, to avoid the appearance of anything underhand, laid an annual tax of one-half of one per cent. upon their bank, and rechartered the other two, whose charters were about to expire. Although peace was restored in this way, great complaints were made of the unpatriotic attitude of the Boston capitalists and bankers during the war, which were probably not without some foundation.

The first president of the new bank was William Gray, who was lieutenant-governor during Governor Gerry's administration. It became a national bank in 1865, and is still in existence, under the name of the State National Bank.

<sup>1</sup> Francis Blake, the fifth son of Joseph and Deborah Smith Blake, was born in Rutland, in 1774, where his father, an old Boston merchant, was then engaged in business. In 1779, the family removed to Hingham, and he completed his preparation for college under Rev. Joseph Thaxter, of that place, at the age of eleven. He was graduated from Harvard in 1789, studied law with Judge Sprague, of Laneaster, and after his admission to the bar in 1794, took the office lately occupied by William Caldwell, in Rutland. In 1801, when the new administration came into power, it was considered an important object to establish a press in Worcester County which should be friendly to the new order of things, and subscriptions amounting to about twelve hundred dollars were obtained from the politicians in the vicinity and in Boston, for the purchase of a press and printing materials, among those aiding the enterprise being Benjamin Austin, James Sullivan, James Prince, Jonathan L. Austin, Levi Lincoln, William Eustis and William Jarvis. In December of that year the National Aegis was established, mainly through the efforts of Mr. Blake, who became its first editor, and removed to Worcester in the following year. Three years later he retired from journalism, to devote himself again to his professional duties. He afterwards abandoned the party whose principles he had so warmly and ably defended, and one of his few literary works which remain is a bitter and sarcastic attack on its policy, in his Fourth of July oration at Worcester, in 1812.

His practice was large, and his success at the bar was mainly due to his eloquence in the courtroom, "where he won by his sweetness and commanded by his dignity; where his learning and logic convinced, where his wit and humor convulsed Bench, Bar and Jury; where his passion roused to indignation or melted into tears." His name is found in most of the Worcester cases from 1804 to 1816, and he was sure to be retained on one side in every important jury trial.

In 1816 failing health compelled him to relinquish his practice, and on the resignation of William Stedman, as clerk of the courts, in that year, he was appointed to that position. His only political office was that of state senator from 1810 to 1812 and from 1813 to 1815.

In private life Mr. Blake is described as "charming," noted for his wit and humor in conversation, and his manner, peculiar to himself, though dignified. "Standing on Main street, some sixty years ago," says Judge Thomas, in 1872, "you might have seen passing along the middle of the way, for it was common then for gentle and simple to use the middle of the street, a gentleman of somewhat more than medium height; of rather broad shoulders; of body and limbs well proportioned, supple and of easy movement. His gait is a little peculiar, for he treads on the right side of his right foot; but though somewhat easy and careless, it is dignified and graceful. With his hands clasped behind him and his head inclined slightly forward, he seems unconscious where he is, who is near him, or whether he is going. He looks as if his whole body thought. You see little of the head but the queue of brown silky hair, tied at the collar of the coat with a ribbon, and hanging carelessly, some eight inches, upon his back. As you approach him he raises his hat, and you see a forehead of ample height and breadth; large, bluish-gray eyes, somewhat deep in their sockets and shaded by long lashes; a mouth large and expressive; the muscles of his face extremely mobile and flexible, capable of changing in a breath from sunshine to cloud and from calm to storm. the "liberty of the yard." These limits were also determined by the Court of Sessions, which, however, had no power to extend them beyond the land of the county, with the highways adjoining or leading to the prison; and if a debtor entered a private house or enclosure, it was an escape, and his bond was forfeited.

The jail limits as fixed in August, 1790, were confined to that part of Lincoln square lying opposite the jail land, excluding the close yard around the building, and the prisoners were required to leave and enter the jail "through the avenue erected from the top of the fence to the front door in the middle story."

In 1808 they were enlarged so as to extend to Samuel Chandler's fence, on the easterly side of Summer street, along which the line ran southerly to the Second Parish Church, where it crossed the street, and continued to the schoolhouse near the corner of Thomas street. It then ran westerly to the brook and northerly by various lines to the northwest corner of the turnpike bridge. The northerly limit was at the Brown and Butman tavern on Lincoln street, a few rods beyond Lincoln square.

In September, 1817, on the petition of Mr. Thomas and others, they were again extended, so as to include the land between a line drawn easterly from the meeting-house and the Worcester Turnpike.

<sup>1</sup> "Election Day" was not, as its name would imply, the day on which the votes were actually cast, but was the beginning of the political year, when the General Court met and was organized. By the original Massachusetts charter it was to be held on "the last Wednesday in Easter terme yearly"; but by the provincial charter of 1691, it was changed to the last Wednesday in May, and the latter date was retained in the constitution of 1780.

It was one of the old New England holidays, and the one day in the year on which persons of every degree, tongue and color had a full right to the liberties of Boston common; and from the fact that the black population were then allowed to buy gingerbread and drink beer there, with their white betters, it received the sobriquet of "Nigger 'Lecton," in distinction from Artillery election, which occurred on the first Monday in June. Not only the day itself, but the whole week was in a great measure given over to pleasure, and Boston was filled with strangers from all parts of the state. In colonial times this greatly scandalized the ministers, and Rev. Urian Oakes, of Cambridge, who preached the "Election sermon" in 1773, declared that it had become a time "to meet, to smoke, carouse and swagger and dishonor God with the greater bravery."

"Anniversary Week" was another name given to this week, because since the charter of 1691, it had been chosen as the time for the country ministers to make their annual visit to Boston, to attend the "Massachusetts Convention of Congregational Ministers," an association formed to bring them together, mainly for a sermon, and for a charitable collection for the widows and orphans of its members. As they were mostly Harvard alumni, it became an occasion for social reunion, and the festivities were of no small importance. They and their families were hospitably entertained by the people of Boston, and on the day after Election day, a dinner was given to them by the Boston ministers, which was often honored by the presence of the governor and the officers of the General Court.

After 1780, when the state constitution was adopted, on the assembling of the General Court, the members were qualified, the officers for the ensuing year elected, and a committee appointed to count the votes of the towns for governor and lieutenant-governor. Then the governor, accompanied by the General Court and the officers of the state, marched, under military escort, to some church which had been selected by him, where the "Election sermon" was preached.

From the early days of the colony a minister was annually appointed by the "Governor and Assistants" to preach this sermon, and "on these occasions political subjects are deemed very proper; but it is expected that they be treated in a decent, serious and instructive manner." The earliest was preached by Rev. John Cotton in 1634, and the first known to have been printed was that of Rev. John Higginson, in 1663. After it became the custom to publish the sermons, the members of the General Court had a certain number for distribution among their constituents, and they thus had a wide circulation among those who were most likely to be influenced by them. With the exception of 1764, when the smallpox raged in Boston, they were delivered every year for two hundred and fifty years.

<sup>1</sup> Caleb Strong, the son of Lieutenant Caleb and Phebe Lyman Strong, was graduated from Harvard in 1764, studied law with Joseph Hawley, in Northampton, and was admitted to the bar in 1772. He was a member of the Committee of Correspondence and Safety in 1774-75; a representative in the General Court from 1776 to 1778; county attorney from 1776 to 1800; a member of the state constitutional convention in 1779; of the council in 1780; and from the latter year to 1789, was in the State Senate. In 1787 he was a member of the convention to frame the Constitution of the United States, and two years later was elected one of the first United States senators from Massachusetts, serving until his resignation in 1796. He was governor of Massachusetts from 1800 to 1807, and from 1812 to 1816. Governor Strong was a warm Federalist, and in his second term was greatly opposed to the War of 1812; and when a requisition was made upon him for troops, he denied the right of the President to make this demand, on constitutional grounds, in which he was sustained by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. When, however, the administration withdrew nearly all the national troops from the coast of the state, leaving it in a defenceless condition, he was active in adopting measures for its safety.

He received the degree of LL.D from Harvard, in 1801; was a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; and a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society.

[Born, Northampton, 9 January, 1745. Died, Northampton, 7 November, 1819.]

<sup>2</sup> At an early hour on this morning the lieutenant-governor-elect (William Phillips), the selectmen of Boston and citizens, escorted by the Boston Hussars, met Governor Strong at the seat of Governor Gore, in Waltham. At about nine o'clock the company started for Boston, and on passing Watertown a federal salute was fired, and the bells were rung. At Cambridge common they were met by large numbers of gentlemen from the surrounding towns, on horseback and in carriages, and an address of welcome was delivered by Colonel John T. Apthorp, the chief marshal of the day, to which Governor Strong briefly responded. A general cavalcade of about six hundred horsemen was then arranged as an escort, the hussars forming around the carriage of the governor and lieutenant-governor, and the carriages following. After the procession had passed Charlestown bridge, and arrived at the Boston line, the "North End Artillery" fired a salute from Copp's Hill, and a similar salute was given by the "Washington Artillery" when Park street was reached. "The moment the Governor's carriage struck the pavement in Boston, a spontaneous plaudit from an immense population welcomed the Patriot to the town; and similar plaudits were repeated when he alighted from his carriage at

<sup>1</sup>The Washington Benevolent Society, a charitable-political association, to aid the widows and orphans of Revolutionary soldiers, and to spread the principles of the Federal party, was first organized in Massachusetts, by the enthusiastic young Federalists of Boston, 22 February, 1812; and on 17 March, Oliver Fiske, William Stedman and six others were authorized by the Hampshire society, at Northampton, to form a branch for Worcester County, which was organized on the following day. At the meeting, 15 April, William Stedman was elected president; Joseph Allen, Benjamin Adams and Oliver Crosby, vice-presidents; Daniel Waldo, secretary; and Samuel Allen, treasurer. These officers, with Oliver Fiske, Nathaniel P. Denny, Elijah Waters and Salem Towne, Jr., formed the standing committee, whose duty it was to distribute the donations of the society. There were also four stewards—Silas Brooks, Asa Hamilton, Reuben Sikes, and William Coolidge,—who provided the places of meeting, collected the ballots, and assisted in keeping order. Meetings were held on the first Wednesday of each month, at which an address, not exceeding fifteen minutes, was usually delivered, and some "proper and useful publication" was read; and at the annual meetings, which took place on the anniversary of the inauguration of Washington, there was a dinner, and an oration by one of the members. There are only two of these orations known to have been delivered in Worcester—those of Samuel M. Burnside, in 1813, and of John Davis, in 1817.

The proceedings were secret, and at the initiation of the members, an address, which formed part of the constitution of the society, was made by the president, explaining the principles upon which the society was founded, and closing as follows:—"Whilst the illustrious Washington was at the head of the Administration of the Federal Government our unparalleled prosperity proved that our national affairs were conducted with purity and wisdom. Then the Constitution was strictly and sacredly regarded, and the rights and privileges of the people not only acknowledged, but constantly cherished and promoted. But, since that period, we believe our Constitution has been violated, publick sentiment has been corrupted, virtue & talents have been proscribed, and the rights and interests of the people have been made the sport of unprincipled ambition . . . Having, with deep regret, observed the baneful effects produced by combinations against the morals and politicks of our fellow-Citizens; having marked the dangerous influence of ambitious and designing men uniting to obtain by means of popular deception every honourable and profitable Office under the Government; and being convinced that very many of those who are loudest in their professions of love of the people, love of liberty and equality, have no other object than the attainment of power and the building of fortunes upon the ruin of their Country;—We have adopted as our Motto 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'—When bad men combine, good men must unite."

The members were then made to swear that they were firmly attached to the Constitution of the United States, and would use their exertions to preserve and defend it against the inroads and contaminations of Aristocracy, Monarchy and Despotism in every form; to divest themselves of all partiality for foreign Nations, more especially when such partiality will interfere with the interests of the United States; to use their endeavors to have the Government administered upon the principles of our beloved Washington; and to exercise their privileges as Citizens, and vote, at all elections, for such men as they conscientiously believed would be faithful to the Constitution, and were attached to the political principle which distinguished the glorious Administration of Washington; and that they would never communicate anything said or done, in this Society, unless it be to a member, or when compelled by process of law.

The Democrats claimed that the forming of these societies at this time was a trick on the part of the Federalists to influence the April elections. "We pretend not," says the National Ægis of 25 March, 1812, "in these days of plots and conspiracies, either to charge Secret Societies with wrong intentions, or to acquit them of the charge. There is something singular, however, in secret schemes of benevolence, and secret modes of paying respect to WASHINGTON."

The Worcester society soon took up the cause of temperance, and 1 December, 1813, issued a circular, calling attention to the mischief daily arising from the distillation of grain in Massachusetts, the magnitude and alarming consequences of the evil. "threatening the country with famine and distress, accompanied by the horrid mischiefs of drunkenness and vice," and asked for co-operation in lessening it. It stated that as much grain could be consumed by one distillery in a month as would probably be used by two hundred families in a year; and suggested the propriety of presenting a petition to Congress, to lay such a tax on domestic spirits, as would afford a rational prospect of diminishing their consumption.

In the political excitement which prevailed during the war, great activity was shown, and the societies multiplied rapidly, but they disappeared with the downfall of Federalism.

The last regular meeting of the Worcester society was held 3 May, 1820; and at a special meeting, 31 August, 1836, it was voted, that as the occasion for which the funds of the society were collected had ceased to exist, and as there was no necessity of their being longer retained to answer any purpose originally contemplated in the formation of the association, they should be appropriated to some public charity; and the Worcester Agricultural Society was chosen, as being "one of peculiar interest to the citizens of Worcester, as dispensing continually its advantages to every class and portion of our Community; and towards which, almost every individual entertains the most favorable regards."

<sup>1</sup> This hill, upon which the State Insane Asylum stands, on Summer street, received its name from the execution of Samuel Frost, of Princeton, near the spot 31 October, 1793. It was also known at this time as Federal hill. To the north-east, extending across the present Mulberry street, was a large chestnut grove, which was used for many years for public celebrations and picnics.

<sup>2</sup> Enoch Lincoln, the fourth son of Levi and Martha Waldo Lincoln, entered the sophomore class at Harvard in 1806, but withdrew in 1808, during his senior year. He studied law with his brother Levi, was admitted to the bar in Worcester County, in 1811, and began to practise in Salem. In 1812 he returned to Worcester, and in the following year removed to Fryeburg, Me., where he devoted himself to his profession and to literature. In 1815 he was appointed deputy by William P. Preble, then district attorney of the United States, and from 1818 to 1826 represented the district of Oxford in Congress. In 1819 he removed to Paris, the county seat, where he continued to practise his profession. He was elected governor of Maine in 1826, by an almost unanimous vote of both parties, and was re-elected the two succeeding years without opposition, but declined to be a candidate in 1829. As governor of the state he was zealously devoted to its interests, and his state papers were noted for their scholarly character, and his messages for their suggestiveness, brevity and good taste. One of his Thanksgiving proclamations was so brief and comprehensive, that it was printed on satin by his admirers. When, during his administration the question of the northeastern boundary of the state arose, he took a strong ground for state sovereignty, and boldly and decidedly, but unsuccessfully, denied the right of the national government to cede any portion of its territory without its consent. He also gave much attention to public improvements and education. In the autumn of 1829, while suffering from severe illness, he went to Augusta to address the Female Academy there, and the effort so exhausted his strength, that he was carried to the house of a friend, where he died three days later. Governor Lincoln never married. He published while in Fryeburg, "The Village," a poem descriptive of that town and the surrounding country, and left in manuscript an unfinished work on the history and resources of Maine.

[Born, Worcester, 28 December, 1788. Died, Augusta, 11 October, 1829.]

<sup>1</sup> According to the account of the Federal celebration of the day, in the Massachusetts Spy, "its arrival was announced by a salute of cannon and the ringing of bells, which, with the beauty of the morning and the conviction that we were yet an independent nation, dispelled the gloom which has for a few weeks past, beclouded the countenance of almost every individual." The procession started from Court hill at eleven o'clock, and returned to Dr. Baneroff's church, where the exercises were opened by Rev. Dr. Thayer, of Lancaster, "in a pathetick and appropriate address to the Almighty Ruler of nations, giving thanks for the happiness which yet remained to us, and imploring his protection under the trials which awaited us. An Oration was delivered by the Hon. FRANCIS BLAKE, which is now in the press, and on which comment or encomium would be lost in the celebrity which will accompany it."

The National Aegis of 17 June, announces that the very motive which some had flattered themselves would prevent the Republicans from celebrating the day in Worcester—the fact "that the most unprecedented exertions are making by our political antagonists, for a mighty display of the strength and splendour of Worcester County Federalism and Washingtonian Benevolence,"—was the principal reason for their doing so. "It has been supposed that Republicans would hide themselves from the spectacle! That they would not dare to shew their heads before fifteen hundred federalists, with flags flying, trumpets blowing, together with all the finery of pictures, medals, and blue ribands, &c. &c. But FELLOW REPUBLICANS, this is not our character. We know the real motives of the enemies of government in this hypocritical parade. . . . We shall feel proudly conscious that we are paying a more sincere and heart-felt respect to the glorious occasion. Let us then assemble and present an honorable contrast of Republican dignity and simplicity to federal folly and foppery." "The Republicans of Worcester County," says the same paper of 8 July, "never fail to greet with appropriate solemnities and festivities, the Anniversary of the Day, which dissolved the connection of their country with a base, corrupted Government, and gave it its rank among the Nations of the Earth. The Second Declaration of Independence gave a new impulse to their patriotism, the present year; and a holy zeal animated every heart, and roused every latent feeling of devotion to their country's cause. . . . The Crisis had arrived—and they felt without fearing it."

The procession, consisting of eight hundred and seventy-two citizens, was escorted by the Worcester Artillery. Abraham Lincoln acted as president of the day, and Major Estes Howe and Adjutant Reuben Monroe were the marshals.

Rev. Mr. Leonard, of Sturbridge, offered a prayer, "devout, patriotick and eloquent—an Address to the Throne of Grace, which led the hearts of the hearers to the only source of support, in times of national emergency, and made a fervent appeal to, while it placed the hopes of the nation on, the GOD OF JUSTICE. A judicious selection of appropriate passages from the incomparable Message of the President, recommending War, was then read, with classical elegance, by WILLIAM C. WHITE, Esquire. The ORATION followed, impressively and eloquently pronounced by ENOCH LINCOLN, Esq. Reiterated and spontaneous bursts of applause, testified the warm approbation of a crowded audience—and the Editor, for himself, can only express his opinion by saying, that the production, in profundity of political views, in correctness of patriotick sentiment, in classical purity and energy of stile, transcended even his highly-raised expectation. The mind of the writer had soared above the ordinary topics of party cavil, and exhibited a lucid epitome of the principles of the Revolution and an unexceptional code of a freeman's duty. After the singing of Billing's Hymn to Independence, an ode was sung with taste and elegance by Mr. GEORGE WARREN, while the audience joined, heart and voice, in the Chorus. This animating emanation of patriotick genius is from the pen of EDWARD D. BANGS, Esq. of this town."

During the dinners which followed the exercises, these toasts were reciprocated by the two parties:—

"The Company assembled on Federal Hill, to celebrate American Independence, have sent their Committee to the Company assembled for the same object, near the South Meeting House, to congratulate them upon the return of this glorious Anniversary—to wish many happy returns of it—and to partecocate with them the following sentiment:—The American Family—While we partake of the Blessings of our Birth right, may we not forget that we are Brethren.

"The Republican Citizens assembled on the Common, for the celebration of the Anniversary of their Country's Independence, most cordially receive and reciprocate the fraternal and patriotic sentiment expressed by their Brethren of the American family assembled on Federal Hill, and propose to them the following Toast—The union of all honest men, when honest men are for the Union."

This was a Stockholders' meeting.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Whipple came this evening from Walpole.

The following were among the toasts given at the tables:—

FEDERAL.

The President of the United States—May the States soon be united in another.

Governor Strong—He has already been "tried seven times in the fire." Another trial exhibits new proof of the purity of his patriotism, and the lustre of his virtues.

Mr. Jefferson—We consent that the surplus he left in the Treasury be appropriated to the erection of his own monument.

The late Governor Gerry—Before he becomes Vice-President, may he be purified from his political vices.

The WASHINGTON BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES and friends of Washington policy throughout the United States—May they preserve the "unity of the Spirit" in the Bond of Peace.

REPUBLICAN.

JAMES MADISON, President of the United States—In the spirit of Republican forbearance, he proffered peace: in the temper of patriotic Independence, he recommends War. Alike prudent and energetic, he directed his policy to the aspect of the times, and in the result has merited the unreserved confidence of Freemen.

His Excellency CALEB STRONG.—The Commander in Chief of the Militia of Massachusetts—May his vigour and promptitude in military duty equal his promptitude in civil evolutions.

THOMAS JEFFERSON—Honor to his name; thanks for his services; and immortal lustre to his example.

ELBRIDGE GERRY—

"Thanks to his foes? "He owes to their unkindest, bitterest spite His kindest fortune."

Washington Benevolent Societies—"They and their name do no more adhere, and keep together than the hundredth psalm and the tune of green sleeves."

<sup>1</sup> The original charter of the Worcester Bank was granted for a period of eight years from 1 October, 1804; and 15 May, 1811, the stockholders voted to apply for its renewal, with the liberty of increasing the capital to a sum not exceeding four hundred thousand dollars, and Levi Lincoln, Jr., was appointed their agent to support the application, and to take whatever steps were necessary. Petitions were presented to the General Court in May, 1811, and January, 1812, but "the conflicting interests of the members of the Legislature," due without doubt to the exertions of the Boston banks, caused their rejection. In May, 1812, the directors presented a third petition, in which they say that "in the interior of a country greatly enterprising, and extensively engaged in all the variety of useful occupation, they would view with anxiety the allotted period for its termination, but from a confidence in the provident wisdom of the Legislature which assures to them its renewal. Nearly eight years of fortunate experiment have tested the utility of the Institution. Since the incorporation of the Bank, its accommodations have been fairly and liberally extended to the industrious and deserving applicant in every class of society. It has cherished and encouraged the manufactures of the country; it has contributed to improvements in Agriculture; it has supported the credit of trade; it has multiplied the resources of business; it has diminished the number of lawsuits. This petition was successful, and in June the charter was granted for a period of twenty years, and the capital was fixed at two hundred thousand dollars.

The first directors elected under the new charter were: Daniel Waldo, Benjamin Heywood, Samuel Flagg, Nathaniel Paine, Oliver Fiske, Levi Lincoln, Jr., and Isaiah Thomas.

<sup>1</sup> Calvin Willard studied law with Richard H. Dana, in Boston, and was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas, in 1809, and in the Supreme Judicial Court, in 1812. He practised for a short time in Barnstable and in Petersham, and then removed to Fitchburg, where he remained until he was appointed sheriff of Worcester County by Governor Lincoln in 1825. He held this office by successive appointments for twenty-two years, living in Worcester, with the exception of the last two or three years, when he lived in Millbury. He returned to Worcester in 1849.

Mr. Willard is spoken of as a model sheriff, somewhat formal in his manner, courteous though reserved to all, and added dignity to his office by his gentlemanly bearing and the care and neatness of his dress, always appearing in the court room in a blue dress coat with gilt buttons, buff waistcoat and ruffled shirt, and bearing his staff of office.

To Maj. LEVI LINCOLN, JR., and Maj. ESTES HOWE.

GENTLEMEN—I have lost no time in Communicating to my detachment, your note of this date, expressing in the name of the Republicans of the town of Worcester, your 'high confidence in the valour and patriotism of the Officers and troops under my command, and your kind wishes for their success and glory, and solicitation to accept of refreshment, as they pass your village;' and have the honour to return you their sincere thanks for this distinguished mark of the civility and attention of the Republicans of the town of Worcester, and to assure you, that they will cheerfully accept of your very polite invitation.

I have the honour to be, with sentiments of the highest consideration and respect, your obedient servant.

J. L. TUTTLE,

<sup>1</sup>Forty-eight towns in Worcester County were represented in this convention, which met in the Baptist Meeting Hall, in the Centre School House. After its organization by the election of General Jonathan Davis of Oxford, as President, and Daniel Gilbert of North Brookfield, as Secretary, a committee consisting of Pliny Merrick (Sen.), Moses White, Joseph Adams, Timothy Whiting, Levi Lincoln, Jr., Nathan Fisher, Samuel Brazer, Jr., William Charles White and Joseph Field, was appointed to draft an address and a set of resolutions. The latter approved and defended the measures of the government in its conduct of the war; denounced the attitude of the Federalists, stating that "they view with horror, the conduct of a desperate party among our citizens, who are advocating the cause, and strengthening the hands of our national enemy; who are striving to paralyze the arm of our constituted authorities; who are exciting disaffection to the Government and opposition to the laws, and are threatening the destruction of our liberties and the loss of our Independence"; and recommended the nominations of Madison and Gerry. The Worcester delegates were Abraham Lincoln, Estes Howe, Levi Lincoln, Jr., Levi Heywood, William E. Green, Samuel Brazer, Jr., Thomas Nichols, Nathan White and William Eaton.

13. Sent a Petition to the Gen. Court for an Act of Incorporation of an Antiquarian Society.<sup>1</sup> No discount

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in General Court assembled.

The subscribers, influenced by a desire to contribute to the advancement of the Arts and Sciences, and to aid, by their individual, and united efforts, in collecting, and preserving such materials, as may be useful in making their progress, not only in the United States, but in other parts of the Globe; and wishing also to assist the researches of the future historians of our Country, respectfully represent to the Legislature, that in their opinion, the establishment of an Antiquarian Society within this Commonwealth would conduce essentially to the attainment of these objects.—At present, there is no public association for such purposes within the United States.—The rapid progress of Science, and of the useful and ornamental arts in our Country may be ascribed, in a great degree, to the numerous public institutions originated by patriotic individuals, but deriving their Countenance and Support from Legislative authority.—Such a Society, as is now contemplated, as its objects are essentially distinct from any other in our Country, it is believed, may advantageously cooperate with, without in the slightest degree impairing the utility of, other institutions.—Its immediate and peculiar design is to discover the antiquities of our own Continent, and by providing a fixed, and permanent place of deposit, to preserve such relics of American antiquity as are portable, as well as to collect and preserve those of other parts of the Globe.—By the long and successful labors of the College of antiquaries in Ireland, (probably the most ancient institution now existing in the world) their historians have been enabled to trace the history of that Country to an earlier period than that of any other nation of Europe.—The researches of a similar Society in England, established at a later period, at times discouraged, but now aided & fostered by the patronage of the government, have not merely furnished food for curiosity, but have provided many valuable materials for the benefit of history, the improvement of Science.

and the advancement of the arts of life.—Almost every nation indeed of the European world bears witness to the utility of similar institutions.—To the enlightened Legislature of Massachusetts, the subscribers do not deem it necessary to exhibit, more in detail, the advantages which may be expected from such an establishment within this Commonwealth.—They ask for no other aid from the Commonwealth, than the facilities, which, in the pursuit of their objects, may accrue from an act of incorporation.—As an inducement to the grant of these privileges, they beg leave to state, that one of their number is, at this time, in possession of a valuable collection of books, obtained with great labor and expense, the value of which may be fairly estimated at about five thousand dollars, some of them more ancient than are to [be] found in any other part of our Country, and all of which, he intends to transfer to the proposed Society, should their project receive the sanction and encouragement of the Legislature. This grant, which is designed as the foundation of a superstructure to be hereafter erected, with such other conditions as may be reasonably expected, the subscribers believe will ensure the future growth and prosperity of the institution.

As no injury can, at any rate be apprehended from such an experiment, even if it should prove unsuccessful, and as it may be productive of much public advantage, the petitioners flatter themselves, their project will not be discountenanced by the government of Massachusetts—They therefore respectfully pray for leave to bring in a bill for the incorporation of themselves and such persons as may hereafter associate with them, into a Society by the name of The American Antiquarian Society, with the privilege of holding real estate in perpetuity of the annual value of fifteen hundred dollars, and with such other privileges and immunities as are usually granted by acts of incorporation to other public Societies established within this Commonwealth.

<sup>1</sup>This was the battle of Queenstown, when General Stephen Van Rensselaer, in command of about six thousand men, half of whom were militia, crossed the Niagara river in the night and attacked the town. Imperfect organization, haphazard preparations and absence of discipline in the militia, rendered it a complete failure. The Americans lost one thousand men in killed, wounded and prisoners, while the British loss was only one hundred.

15. Sat out for Boston in the Coachee with Levi at 6 °Clock to attend to my Petition. Arrived there at 6 °Clock P. M. Lodged at Mr. Soper's—found Eliza had been unwell ever since I was last in Boston.

<sup>1</sup> John Thornton Kirkland was the son of Rev. Samuel Kirkland, the noted missionary to the Indians, a chaplain in the Continental army and the founder of Hamilton College. His mother was Jerusha, daughter of Jabez Bingham, of Salisbury, Conn., and a niece of President Eleazer Wheelock of Dartmouth College.

Dr. Kirkland fitted for college at Andover Academy, living as a beneficiary in the house of Lieutenant-Governor Samuel Phillips, and entered Harvard in April, 1786. He stood high as a scholar, and at his graduation, in 1789, delivered the Latin salutatory oration, then the second part in point of honor. After spending a year as an usher at Andover, he began the study of divinity with Rev. Stephen West, of Stockbridge, Mass. The latter's religious views were, however, too extravagant for him, and he returned to Cambridge, where, while studying for the Unitarian ministry, he was a tutor in metaphysics.

In August, 1793, he first preached as a candidate at the New South Church, in Boston, and was ordained over that society, 5 February, 1794. He immediately took high rank as a writer and preacher, and until the ordinations of William Ellery Channing, in 1803, and of Joseph Stevens Buckminster, in 1805, had no rival in the pulpit in Boston. But his social powers were perhaps more remarkable than his talents as a preacher, and he was distinguished for his conversational abilities, readily adapting himself to all classes of society. He dined out so often, that many wondered how he could find time to write his sermons; but these were often repeated, and it was not uncommon for him to take into the pulpit a number of sermons, and turning the leaves backwards and forwards, to construct a new one as he went along. "The characteristic which marked him out from other men, and made him one of the most conspicuous persons of the age, was the marvellous union of intellectual force and faculties, surpassed by none, with the most simple and unassuming manners, and a universal and unflinching kindness. Thoroughly disinterested he had no capacity for meanness."

On the death of President Webber, in 1810, Dr. Kirkland was unanimously elected the fourteenth president of Harvard University. "If you wish to elevate the University to the highest degree of prosperity of which it is susceptible," said George Cabot just before, "elect Dr. Kirkland for its President. Choose any other man, and it will remain on the same dead level to which it has for so long a time descended." This prophecy was amply fulfilled. In his administration a new impulse was given to its reputation; the number of students was greatly increased; men of the first talents were called into the instruction and government of the college; the course of study was greatly enlarged; the law school established; the medical school reorganized; large additions made to the library; and three new college buildings were erected. On the completion of University Hall, 1 November, 1814, the President dedicated it by a short address and prayer, and then, for the first time, religious exercises were appointed to be held in the chapel for the students exclusively.

Dr. Kirkland's services to the University in removing deep-rooted prejudices, cannot be over-estimated. In his government he was thought by many to be too lenient, but he was generally beloved by the students.

In August, 1827, he was suddenly seized with paralysis, which disabled him from officiating at Commencement, but did not prevent his marriage on 1 September following, to Elizabeth, daughter of George Cabot of Boston.

A few months later, Nathaniel Bowditch, one of the overseers, expressed his dissatisfaction of the fiscal condition of the University so strongly, that Dr. Kirkland and Judge John Davis, the treasurer, resigned, 29 March, 1828, an event which caused great excitement among the friends of Harvard.

After this he travelled both in this country and in Europe, but without essential benefit to his health, and both his physical and mental powers, affected by his illness, gradually declined.

Dr. Kirkland received the degree of A.M. from Dartmouth in 1792, and from Brown in 1794; that of S.T.D. from Princeton in 1802; and that of LL.D. from Brown in 1810. He was vice-president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a member of the Massachusetts Historical and the American Antiquarian Societies.

<sup>1</sup> William Dandridge Peck, the son of John Peck, a noted American ship-builder of the Revolutionary period, was graduated from Harvard in 1782, and for a time was in business in Boston. In 1785, discouraged by the business disappointments of his father, he retired with him to a small farm near Kittery, and took up the study of natural history. Here he remained in comparative obscurity for twenty years, devoting himself to his investigations in botany and entomology, though under great disadvantages, as he could find no associates to sympathize with him in his labors. He inherited his father's mechanical ingenuity, and constructed the most delicate instruments necessary for his researches. "We shall never forget," said one who was with him at the time, "the astonishment of one of the first opticians in London, when Mr. Peck requested him to supply a glass which had been lost out of a microscope made by himself." In 1805, to bring his talents and acquirements into notice and greater usefulness, his friends raised a subscription for a chair of natural history at Harvard, and he became its first professor, though with the greatest reluctance, as his long seclusion had made him averse to accept so conspicuous a position. Shortly after, the college sent him to investigate the scientific institutions of Europe, and during his trip he collected a large number of rare books and specimens for his department. In 1818 he published a catalogue of American and foreign plants.

Professor Peck married, in 1810, Harriet, daughter of Rev. Timothy Hilliard, of Cambridge.

He was a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a member of the Massachusetts Historical, the American Philosophical and the American Antiquarian Societies.

<sup>1</sup> Jonas Stone was the landlord of the "White Lyon," or "Lion Tavern" at 24 Newbury [Washington] street. Although this house was of no especial historical interest, it formed, with the "Lamb" and "White Horse," a little group of taverns between West and Boylston streets, which was one of the well-known features of the provincial period. In 1789, it was known as the "Turk's Head." It later passed into the possession of the Handel and Haydn Society, which used it for the performance of oratorios, under the name of the "Melodeon." In 1835, it was converted into an amphitheatre, called the "Lion Theatre," and in 1844 was christened the "Melodeon."

<sup>1</sup> Jonathan Leavitt, the son of Rev. Jonathan Leavitt, of Heath, Mass., was graduated from Yale in 1786, and began to practice law in Greenfield, about the year 1790. He was a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas from 1811 to 1821, and Judge of Probate for Franklin County from 1814 to 1821. He married Amelia, daughter of President Stiles of Yale.

[Born, Heath, 27 February, 1764.

Died, Greenfield, 1 May, 1830.]

<sup>2</sup> William Bentley was apprenticed to a baker in Boston at the age of fourteen, and at an early age "experienced religion," and joined the First Baptist Church, then under the care of Dr. Stillman, but later became a member of Dr. Baldwin's Church, through whose influence he decided to enter the ministry. He was licensed to preach 3 November, 1806, was ordained as an evangelist in Salem in the following year, and in 1808 became the minister of the Baptist Church in Tiverton, R. I. He was a man of very limited education, but through his own efforts he acquired great Biblical learning, and his large, commanding figure and impressive voice rendered him especially adapted to pioneer work.

The church in Worcester grew rapidly under his care, but unfortunately differences arose between him and some of the influential members of the parish, resulting in the expulsion of James Wilson and William Lazell. They, in turn, made it so uncomfortable for Mr. Bentley that 30 June, 1815, he asked and received dismissal. After leaving Worcester he was minister of the Church in Wethersfield, Conn., for six years, and then for a number of years was a general missionary and evangelist in Connecticut, and was subsequently over the Second Baptist Church in Middletown.

[Born, Newport, R. I., 3 March, 1775. Died, Hartford, Conn., 24 December, 1855.]

in Greenville, Leicester, and was imprisoned in the Worcester jail for non-payment of his ministerial dues. In that year James Wilson, a member of the Baptist Church in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in England, came to Worcester, and during the following seventeen years occasional meetings were held in his house. But there were apparently no new converts, and the death of the three original members left him for a time the only Baptist in the town. In the spring of 1812 Elder Caleb Green of Newport, R. I., was in Worcester one Sunday, and wishing to preach, Mr. Wilson asked Dr. Austin for the use of his church, which he refused on the ground that he was a close communionist. Elder Green however preached in Mr. Wilson's house to a large congregation, and from that time meetings were held more frequently, in private houses, and in the outlying schoolhouses of the town.

On Sunday, 31 May, Elder William Bentley of Tiverton, R. I., preached three sermons in the old schoolhouse on the Common, and between the afternoon and evening services baptism by immersion was administered for the first time in Worcester, in Colonel Samuel Flagg's mill pond on Green street. These sermons called forth an attack from Dr. Austin on the following Sunday, in which he characterized the Baptists as "a sneaking set who hovered about the suburbs, not daring to come into the centre of the town," and according to the records of Mr. Wilson "the Rev. Dr. railed against what he was pleased to denominate the audacity of the Baptists in approaching the droppings of his sanctuary."

But in spite of all opposition the society grew steadily, and its numbers were increased by several members of the First Parish, who were offended by some discourses of Dr. Austin on national and state fasts; and at the formation of the church there were twenty-eight members, fourteen men and fourteen women. The hall in the Centre schoolhouse was rented, and on 30 July meetings began to be regularly held there. 28 September, Elder Bentley was engaged as minister, at a salary of three hundred dollars and an allowance of four Sundays for visits; and 5 November "the Baptist Church in Worcester" was formed, a confession of faith adopted, and 9 December fixed as the time for the constituting of the church, the reception of fellowship from others, and the installation of the minister.

Again the use of the Old South Church was asked, and the request was granted by the selectmen and the parish assessors. On the morning of the installation, however, Mr. Wilson received a letter from Dr. Austin, who, with Dr. Bancroft, had been invited to dine with the council on that day, saying that he would gratefully acknowledge the invitation as a testimony of Christian affection and confidence, if facts did not forbid him to do so; that to treat those who appear to be the real people of God with tenderness and fraternal respect, he esteemed to be among the first of his duties; but that for several important reasons he could not accept the invitation, and expressed the greatest repugnance to the occupation of his pulpit for that purpose, declaring it to be "against a full expression of personal feeling, the right, and the Christian ministry, the order of Christ's house and the laws of the land"; and once for all declared his intention to act in regard to them merely on the defensive, and, as he was determined not officiously to interrupt, so he wished not to be interrupted, in the prosecution of a work, which had been assigned to him, as he hoped, by the Redeemer of Zion.

"This fact is the more remarkable," says the National Aegis, "as Mr. Austin professes a religion, which, so far from teaching us to return evil for good, expressly admonishes us to the contrary practice, that of subduing our foes, by heaping kindness upon them. It is also worthy of notice, that, notwithstanding Mr. Austin's opposition to the Baptists, and his refusal of his pulpit to them, he has himself preached in the pulpit of Elder Gano, of Providence, and in that of Elder Baldwin of Boston. Yet, so poor was his remembrance of the courtesies he had formerly received from others and so loosely did the bands of hospitality sit upon him on Wednesday last, that he denied his pulpit even to this very Mr. Gano; and this, it seems, he did, without having to resist the troublesome suggestions of delicacy, and good manners. . . . The solemnities of the day were performed in the Meeting House of the Rev. Doct. Bancroft, who, on this, as on every other occasion, displayed the most courteous and christian disposition. He was happy in granting his pulpit, he attended the services, and dined with the Council at the house of James Wilson, Esq."

The sermon before the Council in the morning was by Elder Joseph Cornell and that in the afternoon by Elder Stephen Gano, minister of the First Baptist Church in Providence, R. I., who also gave the right hand of fellowship.

29 May, 1813, the society began the erection of a meeting-house east of the Common, which was dedicated in the following December.

<sup>1</sup>8 February, 1793, Nathaniel Chandler, Charles Chandler, Samuel Chandler, Clark Chandler, John Stowers, Joseph Torrey, Benjamin Andrews, Samuel Brazer, Ephraim Mower, John White and Joseph Allen, Jr., met at the "Sun Tavern," at the corner of Main and Mechanic streets, to take the initiatory step towards forming a Masonic lodge in Worcester. Right Worshipful Isaiah Thomas, Past Master of Trinity Lodge, in Lancaster, was elected Master, and it was voted to petition the Grand Lodge for a charter of a lodge, to be known as "The Morning Star Lodge." This was granted 25 March, and the lodge was consecrated 11 June, by Most Worshipful Grand Master John Cutler, and officers of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, among them being Paul Revere, Rev. Thaddeus Mason Harris and Benjamin Russell. The members of the lodge present were Right Worshipful Isaiah Thomas, Master; Nathaniel Paine, Senior Warden; Samuel Chandler, Junior Warden; Benjamin Andrews, Senior Deacon; Joseph Torrey, Junior Deacon; John Stanton, Treasurer; John Stowers, 1st Steward; Ephraim Mower, 2nd Steward; Eli Gale, Tyler; and Joseph Allen, Jr., Joseph Trumbull, J. from Masons' Hall to the North Meeting House, where a sermon was delivered by Rev. Aaron Bancroft. Until the erection of Healy's Hall, the regular meetings were held at the Exchange Hotel.

Morning Star Lodge continued to be an active organization until the Anti-Masonic agitation from 1828 to 1835, when, in common with many lodges throughout the country, it was dormant. It again became active in 1842, and continues to the present time. Among its early masters were William Caldwell, Benjamin Heywood, James Wilson, Ephraim Mower, Elder William Bentley and Christopher Columbus Baldwin. Mr. Thomas was always prominent in the organization, and was twice Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. John Quiney Adams called him the "archdevil of Masonry," and in his diary 26 September, 1826, in describing a conversation with Alexander H. Everett relating to the Anti-Masonic party, in which the latter speaks of the Masonic power as "altogether unaccountable, considering in how low estimation it had been held before the controversy," says: "I told him I thought it might easily be accounted for. The power had formerly operated without being seen, but it might be traced to Isaiah Thomas, of Worcester and through him to Benjamin Russell, many years publisher of the Boston Sentinel. They were printers, and made fortunes, Thomas a very large one, by their types. They made Freemasons of all their apprentices and journeymen."

Levi Lincoln, Jr., and Samuel M. Mills and Ebenezer T. Andrews were appointed a committee to consider and report upon the most eligible means for raising a fund for the society.

The eldest daughter of a family of thirteen children, many household cares devolved upon her in her early years, and in addition to these, she helped out her father's small income by keeping a store in a little room built on the north side of his house, on Main street.

After her marriage, Mr. Davis's public life brought with it a more conspicuous position for her, and in the years that he held the executive office, when their financial circumstances were not the most ample, the composure and simplicity with which she presided over the household, lent to it a dignity which was superior to pomp and ostentation. While he was in the Senate much of her time was spent in Washington, where she was a universal favorite. "Life at the capital was not altogether the same as now," wrote Governor Bullock, at the time of her death. "In social official life there was at that time less of the glittering nothingness, and extravagances, less of rejection of interesting occupation and serious affection, which blast the summit of human fortune with perpetual barrenness. The memory of Mrs. Washington still lingered in the official circles. Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. Madison still lived and passed their winters there, in their simple, ungarish way. Among such Mrs. Davis found congenial place and took natural rank, not unlike the three who have been mentioned, not inferior to either of them, according to all accounts quite resembling Mrs. Madison, whom it was said everybody loved, who gave a character to the White House which it has not uniformly kept since. Among all the scenes of historical interest of that period, Mr. Clay was alike in the Senate and the drawing room the recognized chief and favorite. It was he who said that, all things considered, Mrs. Davis was the foremost woman at Washington."

Although she retired from the more active social duties after the death of Mr. Davis, her interest in them never abated, and always delighting in the companionship of the young, was never happier than when promoting their pleasures. Her time was given largely to patriotic and philanthropic benevolence. Throughout the Civil War she was untiring in her efforts for the relief of the soldiers, and for a year after she was stricken down, she directed the completion of one of her undertakings in their behalf.

"Her life has, for forty years," continued Governor Bullock, "been one of public distinction, so to speak, conspicuous by no means chiefly in the reflected light of her eminent father, or more eminent husband and brother, but rather in her own individuality of moral and intellectual excellence. It is her own example and influence, her own character and reputation, which have gladdened and embellished every circle she moved in, and which will long be remembered in this city as having placed her at the head of her sex among the social forces of the past and present generation. . . . An uncommonly correct judgment, a lively imagination, a most charitable disposition, a generous way of thinking, an elevation of character, a perceptivity that had a tinge of the poetic, a warmth and tenderness of affection, conferred the strength and grace, which properly combined, are a crown to the best of womanhood. One who was during a considerable period a resident in her household, may be permitted to recall, that in the utmost freedom of daily conversation there was that absolutely invariable kindness of remark upon others, which cannot always be a gift, but must sometimes be a conquest,—and then it is the highest of mortal triumphs. And her manners were most gracious."

only newspaper printed in that place previous to 1775, but this not proving as successful as he had anticipated, he left the office in the care of his mother, and for a time was associated with John Holt in the publication of Parker's Gazette and Post Boy in New York. After the repeal of the Stamp Act in 1766, he went to Philadelphia, and with Joseph Galloway and Thomas Wharton, published the Pennsylvania Chronicle, his partners furnishing the capital. They, however, were strongly attached to the ministerial measures, and trouble arose which resulted in Goddard's removing to Baltimore in 1773. Here he again began a newspaper, The Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser, the third attempted in the province; but at this time there was only one other published. About this time he became interested with Mr. Thomas, who was then publishing the Massachusetts Spy in Boston, John Holt, of New York, Thaddeus Burr, of Fairfield, Conn., and others, in a plan to abolish in effect the general post-office under the direction of the British government, and to establish an opposition line of post-riders from New Hampshire to Georgia. The enterprise was to be supported by private individuals, and giving the management of his office and paper to his sister Katherine, he devoted his time to canvassing the country for subscriptions. The scheme was nearly completed, and the greater part of the money raised, when the Revolution broke out. After the establishment of the Continental post-office, he was appointed surveyor of post-roads, by Franklin, but when the latter went to France, he was disappointed in not obtaining the office of secretary and comptroller of the post-office, which he had before expected at its establishment. He resigned in 1776 and returned to Baltimore, but several articles in his paper, written by General Charles Lee, gave such offence to the Whigs, that he was several times mobbed, and was eventually compelled to leave the town. He was variously employed until 1784, when he resumed his printing office and continued in business until 1792. He then retired to a large farm in Johnston, R. I., and subsequently lived in Providence.

28. Rain, steadily all day. Went twice to Chh. Traveling very bad. Water in the brooks, &c. rose very high.

29. The water rose high in the brook on the night of the 29th, and the water gate of the mill dam, under the hatter's shop not being raised,—the water carried off a necessary house, which came down the stream to the bridge and got fixed in the arch at the head of the bridge; the current being thus checked, forced its way thro a small passage undermined the foundation, and four feet of it fell—the water flowed over the road and carried away not less than 160 loads of gravel in the goal yard between the goaler's house and the goal—the cellars adjacent were filled with water.

30. Attended at the bank.

31. Bought two wild ducks—Subscribed, by request, to a ball to be given on Supreme Court week—and in a new hall in the tavern adjoining the bank.

chief historical interest is the prominent part it played in Shays's Rebellion. For nearly half a century it was the leading hotel in the county, where distinguished travellers away stopped, and it was the headquarters for the court and bar during court weeks. In 1793 Patch was succeeded by William Barker, who in turn sold it to Samuel Johnson, about the year 1803. On the death of the latter, in 1807, it came into the hands of Reuben Sikes, of Suffield, Conn., who, with Levi Pease, of Shrewsbury, had established the first line of stages from Boston to New York, in 1783. It was kept by Sikes until his death, in 1824, and under him it became the centre of arrival and departure for all the stages running to and from Worcester. For the next sixteen years it was under the management of Samuel B. Thomas, and since that time it has passed through many hands, and its popularity has gradually waned.

A lithograph of the house, published about the year 1830, shows a double veranda on the southern half of the building; and on the northern half, six large arched windows extend through the second and third stories showing that this was the large hall where balls and parties were held for so many years. The circular beneath the picture states that.

“The Exchange Coffee House and General Stage Office,

By SAMUEL B. THOMAS, (the present Proprietor,) is one of the largest and most commodious Establishments in the United States. The Proprietor pledges himself that the weary Traveller may find quiet Repose and comfortable Refreshments at this House. It is provided with BATH ROOMS and WATER CLOSETS; and is situated in the centre of the beautiful village of Worcester, opposite the New Brick Church, and within a few yards of the Court House and Antiquarian Hall, 40 miles from Boston, on the great post road to New-York, Albany, and various other important places. This has been long known and kept for many years as the only important Stage House in the town, Stages moving during the day in almost every direction to and from this place. Extra Stages and private Carriages may be had at the shortest notice.”

The house has been known at various times as the “United States Arms”; “Barker's Tavern,” at the “Sign of the Golden Ball”; “Sikes's Coffee House”; “Sikes's Stage House”; “Thomas's Exchange Coffee House”; “Thomas's Temperance Exchange”; and the “Exchange Hotel.”

and the heights about Boston; but they were all doomed to disappointment, for the two vessels, a little after noon, stood out to sea and disappeared from sight. Although the pilot who took the Chesapeake out brought back the news of her loss, which was confirmed by other witnesses, the people refused to believe it, and it was not until the official accounts of her capture and the death of Lawrence reached Boston nearly three weeks later, that all hope was abandoned.

<sup>1</sup> The by-laws of the society, as adopted 3 February, 1813, required that there should be three meetings annually:—in Boston on the twenty-second of December, (the annual meeting); in Boston on the first Wednesday in June; and in Worcester on the Wednesday next after the first Tuesday in September. In the following December the date of the annual meeting was changed to 23 October. A revision of the by-laws in October, 1831, provided for two meetings each year; the annual meeting in Worcester on 23 October, and a semi-annual meeting in Boston, on the last Wednesday in May; the latter date falling in "Anniversary Week," however, it was changed in May, 1850, to the last Wednesday in April.

The members elected were Dr. David Hunt, of Northampton; Rev. Samuel Cary, of Boston; Rev. Ebenezer Fitch, of Williams College; James Winthrop, of Cambridge; Isaac Goodwin, of Sterling; Thomas L. Winthrop, of Boston; Samuel J. Prescott, of Boston; Frederick William Paine, of Worcester; President John Wheelock, of Dartmouth; James Hugh McCulloch, of Baltimore; Noah Webster, Jr., of Amherst; Dr. David Ramsey, of Charleston, S. <sup>1</sup> Nathaniel Thayer, the son of Rev. Ebenezer and Martha Cotton Thayer, of Hampton, N. H., was fitted for college in the first class at Phillips Exeter Academy, and was graduated from Harvard in 1789. He studied for the ministry under Rev. Dr. Osgood, of Medford, and soon after his approbation, he preached as a candidate at the church on Church Green, Boston, and received a majority of the votes of the proprietors for settlement. His active ministry commenced at Wilkesbarre, Penn., where he lived for a year in the family of Timothy Pickering, Secretary of War during Washington's administration. 9 October, 1793, he was ordained over the church in Lancaster, as colleague to Rev. Timothy Harrington, whom he succeeded two years later. A melodious voice of great compass and flexibility, which gave great impressiveness to his discourses, and his wisdom in church polity, made him long regarded as one of the leaders of his denomination in the county. He died suddenly at Rochester, in the summer of 1840, while on a journey with his daughter through New York State.

Dr. Thayer received the degree of D.D. from Harvard in 1817. He married 22 October, 1795, Sarah, daughter of Christopher Toppan, of Hampton.

<sup>2</sup> On Saturday the 23d ult. the auspicious day, on which the western world was first disclosed to the view of Europe, was celebrated the first Anniversary of this infant Institution. The Society convened at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Exchange Coffee House in Boston, and proceeded at 11 o'clock to the Stone Chapel, where the publick exercises of the day were performed before a numerous assembly. The Rev. Mr. Cary introduced the exercises by a solemn, pertinent, and impressive prayer, and by appropriate readings from the sacred scriptures. The Oration was pronounced by the Rev. Professor Jenks, of Bowdoin College. Of this performance it were difficult to speak in terms of exaggerated praise. It exhibited a depth of scientific research, an extent of learning, and a purity of style, which would do much honour to literary characters of the first grade in any country. It will soon be presented to the publick, and will not, we trust, like most of the occasional productions of the day, be buried, after a single reading, in forgetfulness, but will be preserved and remembered by the American scholar, as an honourary proof of the literature of our native country. The services of the Chapel were interspersed with the richest music, and were highly gratifying to the enlightened audience, who attended them. It cannot be doubted, that an Institution, whose objects are so particularly important to this extensive and growing continent, and so highly useful to the common interests of science, will receive the general good wishes, the liberal encouragement, and the united patronage of all the friends of learning and virtue.”—National Egis, 3 November, 1813.

The order of exercises, as given in the manuscript records of the society, was:—

“Voluntary on the organ.

Prayer, by the Rev<sup>d</sup>. Mr. Cary.

Psaln 145, from the Chapel Church collection sung.

Tune, Old Hundred.

the summer, but not desiring an early settlement, he returned to Connecticut, and preached at Woodstock, Preston and Stafford. In March, 1762, he accepted a call to become the minister of the church in Shrewsbury, and was ordained 23 June. His services covered a period of nearly sixty-three years, during which he was never absent from a stated communion. He was settled on a salary of £66, 13s. 4d., or about $222.00, which was increased in 1809, to $286.67. With this he brought up a family of eight children, one of whom was educated at Dartmouth, and left at his death a comfortable fortune, mostly in real estate.

He was a man of the most liberal views, and during his pastorate, the Calvinistic additions to the covenant were erased by vote of the church, undoubtedly through his influence; and although he took no part in the theological controversy, which arose in this time, between the Trinitarian and Unitarian portions of the Congregational Church, his sympathies and associations were known to be with the latter. "I was brought up in the orthodox faith, and have always lived in it, and I expect to die in it," he once remarked to Dr. Austin of the First Church in Worcester. "But," was the reply, "you clipped off its corners." "Yes," retorted Dr. Sumner, "and they need clipping more." Dr. Sumner had a most imposing presence, was tall and erect, six feet four inches in height, and always wore the costume of the eighteenth century—knee-breeches, silver buckles, cocked hat and white wig.

He received the degree of D.D. from Harvard, in 1814, and at about the same time from Columbia College, South Carolina. He married, 12 May, 1763, Lucy, daughter of Deacon William Williams of Mortlake, Conn., who died 13 February, 1810.

About 400, certainly not less, pass and repass, weekly, through Worcester from Boston to Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania—a number go as far as Maryland, and some to South Carolina & Georgia. <sup>1</sup> The blockade of the Atlantic seaboard by the British fleet in 1813 was a serious interruption to the coasting trade, which for years had employed thousands of vessels for the transportation of the products of New England, and the East India goods which were brought to her ports, the flour of the Middle States and the rice and cotton of the South. This intercourse, thus cut off by water, was necessarily transferred to the land, and the enterprise of some Boston merchants who chartered a few wagons and sent them with loads to Philadelphia and Baltimore immediately created a new industry, and by early summer the roads leading southward were filled with a continuous stream of huge canvas-covered wagons, drawn by double or triple teams of horses or oxen, bound from Salem and Boston as far as Augusta and Savannah. At the close of the year it was estimated that four thousand wagons and twenty thousand cattle, horses and oxen were thus employed. Soon the owners of the wagons, in order to keep track of their goods, which were often entrusted to unknown teamsters, devised the method of naming them like ships and of keeping rough logs in which were entered the names, destination and information of other wagons met on the road; and which were published in the newspapers of the towns through which they passed. Many of these names were humorous, such as "Commerce renewed and Old Times," "Neptune Metamorphosed" "Mud Clipper," "Jefferson's Pride," "Sailors' Misery" and "Don't Give up the Ship"; while the newspapers, entering into their spirit published their arrival and departure in the column devoted to marine intelligence, under such headings as "Horse Marine Intelligence," "Horse and Ox Marine News" and "Jeffersonian Commerce." Each town was a "port" and the driver of the wagon the "captain." One of these notices in the Columbian Centinel reads: "Port of ALEXANDRIA, Oct. 25.—Ar, the fast sailing waggon Nonpariel, Capt. Jackson, 25 days from Boston, shoes, domestic cottons and playing cards, to the supercargo. Spoke 19th inst. in lat. 39, 50 the 5 horse waggon Yankee, Capt. Smith, with an assorted cargo from Providence, for Baltimore to order. 20th spoke waggon James Madison, Capt. Drew, laden with domestic cloths from Providence, for the first port; in distress, having the day before encountered a rough sea which hove him on his beam ends, sprung his main axletree, broke one spoke and sprung several of his main larboard wheels; his cargo shifted with such force that it stove his tail-board, broke in his larboard railing and carried away all his canvass by the board. In this situation she fortunately lay perfectly quiet until by the great exertions of himself and crew, the cargo was so far removed that she was righted." The National Egis of 3 November, 1813, contains the announcement that "On Monday last, left this port, (Worcester) bound to Savannah two waggons, under the command of Commodore Eaton and Capt. Moore, loaded with cards, shoes, &c. Also, same day, a large, new-built 5 horse waggon, laden with a cargo of about 3000 hats, under Capt. Rice—Destination, Alexandria, Col. Dis."

The Democratic papers published similar notices in a different spirit, and the Boston Patriot, a supporter of the administration and the war, says:—

"Friday, Nov. 12.—Arrived, the clump ship Bulwark, from a political cruise through New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island, with authenticated copies of the Connecticut Blue Laws, a few grindstones, a led mule, onions, a few pair of Rhode Island spectacles, &c. consigned to Deacon P— and Gov. S.

"Sailed.—The fast-sailing horse-waggon Morality for Vergennes, (Vt.) with a cargo of 'QUINCY'S Resolves,' for the use of the workmen in the famous cannon ball foundry."

There were necessarily many delays in this method of transportation, caused by the state of the roads, and the unfitness of the ferry-boats on the great rivers, and in New York lines of wagons might often be seen drawn up along the streets for several days, waiting for an opportunity to cross. Then, too, New England became scandalized at the long stream of wagons which passed through her towns every Sunday, and the old laws against travelling on the Sabbath, which even in Connecticut had become almost obsolete, since the advent of the turnpike and the quick-packet stage, were again rigidly enforced.

The tything-man had been powerless to stop unaided a coach and four dashing at full speed through the village street, but it was different with the heavily loaded wagons, which were almost invariably held up, and the drivers fined. In Connecticut the towns of Fairfield and Wethersfield were the especial dread of the drivers for this reason, and the following paragraph from the Columbian Centinel of 23 October, shows that the lighter vehicles did not always succeed in eluding his vigilance:—

"Port of FAIRFIELD, (Con.) Oct. 16. on Sunday last, about nine o'clock, A. M. the new fast sailing inland Boston and N. York packet hove in sight, standing westward under a press of sail. She was hailed as she passed, by one of the informing and boarding officers on this station and commanded to heave to; but being much superior in size and weight of metal, he found it impossible to detain her.—Between one and two o'clock p. m. same day, arrived a fleet from the eastward, consisting of four Connecticut tin waggons, outward bound, two coaches, one phaeton and one tandem gig.—They were hailed in due form, and all but the gig, hove to, without opposition. Her commander being a man of spirit, refused to submit, and thought to escape by superior sailing. She was, however, compelled to strike, after a sharp action of five minutes, in which, happily, no lives were lost on either side.—At 5, p. m. same day, the other new, fast-sailing inland Boston and New-York Packet, bound eastward, and full of passengers, attempted to pass with every rag of sail set. The revenue cutter lying directly in her course, she hauled her wind and already thought herself clear—but the cutter, by a bold and masterly manœuvre, tangled the packet in her mizen chains, and brought her at once upon her beam ends. Finding further resistance vain, she submitted. As soon as a court could consistently be held, the prisoners (between twenty and thirty in number) were all indicted for breach of Sabbath, and pleading guilty, were all fined and required to pay costs. Upon complying with the order of court, they were released and permitted to proceed. ¶ We would advise all foreigners, as well as our own citizens, not to attempt travelling in this State, hereafter upon the SABBATH, as we understand the old non-intercourse law, which has long slept, is about to be revived and rigorously enforced, throughout the State."

In summer, when the roads were good and there were no long delays the trip from Boston to Baltimore was made in twenty-six days; from Baltimore to Richmond in ten days; and from Baltimore to Augusta in thirty-three days.

<sup>2</sup> Henry Bancroft, the son of Aaron and Lueretia Chandler Bancroft, was a captain in the East Indian service. As sailing master he had command of one of McDonough's ships, when he gained his victory on Lake Champlain, 3 September, 1814. [Born, Worcester, 8 October, 1787. Died, Worcester, 26 October, 1817.]

<sup>3</sup> William Charles White, the son of William White, a Boston merchant, was fitted for business, and for several years was in the store of Joseph Coolidge, in Boston; but this occupation soon became distasteful to him, and powerful attractions to the stage, formed at an early age, were too strong to be overcome. In 1796, at the age of nineteen, he had written "Orlando," a tragedy, and in December of that year he made his first appearance at the Federal Street Theatre, as Norval, in the tragedy of Douglas, to the great grief of his father, who had the profound horror of the stage, so common at that time, and whose letters to his son on the subject are so extravagant in their expressions as to be almost ludicrous: "Dear William! for so I will still call you; my beloved son! stain not the memory of your amiable and tender mother by your folly; break not the heart of your father; bring not down his gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. . . . Your youth will excuse you for once . . . . But, for God's sake, and everything you hold dear, I pray you to refrain, and be not again seen on a common stage." A week later he appeared in his own tragedy, and his success so far reconciled his father, that he consented to allow him to act occasionally. "Let me enjoin it upon you," he wrote, "never to appear, no, not for once, in any comic act, where the mimic tricks of a monkey are better fitted to excite laughter, and where dancing, singing and kissing, may be thought amusement enough for a dollar." After a few months, however, his popularity waned, and leaving the stage, he studied law with Levi Lincoln, in Worcester, and with Judge Howell in Providence. He opened an office in the latter place, but lack of business and increasing debts drove him again to the stage in New York, and he also played for a few nights in Richmond, Va., with such success that he determined to devote his life to the theatre. Another reversal of fortune again cured his mania, and in 1801 he opened an office in Rutland, Mass. His practice was not as large as he had anticipated, and having contracted, in 1809, to compile a "Compendium of the Laws of Massachusetts," he removed to Boston in 1810, to complete that work, and had an office in the old State House, in partnership with David Everett, the editor of the Boston Patriot. In 1811 he succeeded Edward Bangs as county attorney, and retained this office until his death. In 1812 he established himself in Grafton, returned to Worcester in the following year, and from 1814 to 1816 lived in Sutton.

26. Sent my resignation as a Director of the Worcester Turnpike Corporation, in which capacity I have served ever since the Corporation commenced.

Mr. White's love of the drama continued throughout his life, and he proved himself more successful as a writer than as an actor. His first play, "Orlando," was published in 1797, with a prologue by Thomas Paine, and a portrait of the author in character. "The Clergyman's Daughter" was presented at the Boston Theatre, 1 January, 1810, with an epilogue by Robert Treat Paine, Jr., and obtained remarkable success; and the New Year's address of the carriers of the Columbian Centinel to their patrons on that day, contains the following lines:—

"But now for New Year's Day and New Year's Night,

We give you joy, and fame, and Mr. WHITE!

First of Columbian Bards, who, unconceal'd,

Has dar'd his name, on scenick boards, to yield—

Whose bold ambitious genius aims to spread

A wreath of bay around his Country's head;

Who, as he draws from night her world of mind,

SHOWS HOW HER ORE MAY GLITTER, WHEN REFIN'D."

In the following December "The Poor Lodger," a comedy founded on Miss Burney's "Evelina," also containing an epilogue by Robert Treat Paine, Jr., was successfully produced at the same theatre.

Four Fourth of July orations by Mr. White were also published: at Rutland, in 1802; at Worcester, in 1804; at Boston, before the Bunker Hill Monument Association, in 1809; and at Hubbardston, in 1810.

Mr. White was a frequent contributor to the National Aegis while Mr. Blake had charge of it, and in 1812 he succeeded Samuel Brazer, Jr., as its editor; but he found that he could not support the views of the party and resigned in a few months, publishing in July, 1813, a pamphlet, "Avowals of a Republican," to vindicate his action.

Mr. White married, while in Rutland, Tamar Smith, who died in 1813; and in August, 1815, he was again married to Susan Johannot, daughter of Dr. Stephen Monroe, of Sutton.

<sup>1</sup>Among the American prisoners taken at the battle of Queenstown were twenty-three Irishmen, who, although they had been naturalized long before the opening of the war, were sent to England to be tried for treason, on the ground that they were British born subjects. In March, 1813, Congress passed an act authorizing the President to take retaliatory measures; and in October, General Dearborn received instructions to put into close confinement twenty-three British officers, as hostages for the safe-keeping and exchange of the American soldiers. 27 October, General Baynes, the British commander, notified General Dearborn that he had been instructed by the home government to immediately put into close confinement forty-six American officers and non-commissioned officers; that if any of the British officers, by reason of the conviction of the soldiers confined in England, should suffer death he was instructed to select out of the American officers double the number, to suffer instant death; and that he was further instructed to notify him that the war would be prosecuted with unmitigated severity against all cities, towns and villages belonging to the United States, if within a reasonable time after this communication was transmitted to his government, it should not be deterred from putting to death any British soldiers. Upon receiving this communication, the President ordered into close confinement twenty-three additional British officers, who were placed in different jails in New England. Ten of these officers had come to Worcester on parole some time before, expecting daily to receive notice that an exchange had been effected, and their commitment to the Worcester jail caused great excitement among the Federalists, several of whom, among them Francis Blake, Dr. Oliver Fiske and William Stedman, went to the jail shortly after, to see that they were properly cared for.

A dispute arose between James Prince, the United States marshal, who had made the commitment, and the sheriff, Thomas Walter Ward, of Shrewsbury, as to the manner of treating the prisoners, which, after a heated discussion, finally ended in their being left in the care of the sheriff. The bitter, but evidently unmerited, criticisms of the Federalists on the severity of the marshal, were the subject of much newspaper controversy. According to their charges, made later by affidavit, the prisoners were found locked up in two separate rooms, five in each, with no furniture except a short stool, or bench, a small, dirty pine table, and a straw bed about six feet square, upon which were one or two rag coverlets. One of the rooms was declared to be very "loathsome," having been previously occupied by a maniac, and both were without fires. In the language of Mr. Blake, "a bloated pensioner upon the public sufferings, assuming the authority of the Chief Magistrate, and dealing out his Five Hundred Dollars to Spies and Informers, as a bounty upon perjury, and an encouragement to cut-throat scoundrels, to proscribe and persecute their innocent fellow-citizens, who have rendered themselves obnoxious to this infamous public accuser, is a spectacle as hideous as was ever presented in the bloodiest period of the French Revolution."

Through the intervention of the Federalists additional comforts were allowed to the prisoners, many liberties were given to them, and they were further allowed to retain one of their servants.

<sup>1</sup>In 1789 the first Congress passed a resolution, recommending to the several states, to allow the use of their jails by the Federal government, but allowing the marshals to provide other places, when this was denied. This was generally complied with, but now Massachusetts, with the rest of the New England states and several others, denied the right of the Federal government to exercise such a right in the case of prisoners of war, and on 7 February, 1814, the General Court passed an act forbidding the use of the jails within the state by the Federal government for the confinement of prisoners committed by any other than judicial authority; and requiring the jailers, at the end of thirty days, to discharge all prisoners of war. This led to an act of Congress, to the same effect as the resolution of 1789, and an application by the president to the Legislature of Pennsylvania for the use of its penitentiaries for prisoners of war, was immediately granted.

10. Finished taking an Account of the Stock in the Store.

11. Attended at the Bank. Dr. Thayer from Boston and Mrs. Legate from Leominster visited us. Went with them to prison to visit the Officers confined there. Miss Calef went with us.—Young Thayer, a midshipman taken in the Chesapeake, and lately from Halifax, visited us this Evening—went with [us] to prison to see the British Officers for some of whom they had Letters. Gov<sup>r</sup>. Lincoln's daughters, and his son Levi & wife visited us.

12. Visited the British officers, prisoners in Goal—took my leave of them, hearing they were to be removed. This Evening to prevent their being removed—they confined the Turnkey—and made their escape, 9 in number. Canon were fired in the night, and the bells rang an alarm—

Barns, cellars and houses searched for them, but none were found concealed therein. Mine among others. One, a German Officer was detected and retaken near Holden turnpike gate and recommitted—afterwards 4 more.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This escape caused great satisfaction to the Federalists in general, throughout New England. It was not a matter of much surprise, as the loose manner in which the prisoners were guarded, and the liberties which were given to them, were well known. They were allowed to receive their friends freely, many even coming from Boston and elsewhere, who supplied them with delicacies, and probably with information, to the great indignation of the Democrats, who denounced in the strongest language these "kind-hearted federalists," "these lovers of their enemies." Although repeated representations of the danger of their escape were made to the marshal, no attention was apparently paid to them. Nevertheless he was quietly making his preparations, and when, on 10 January, Major Snelling, of the United States Army, arrived in Worcester with two carriages, it was immediately conjectured that they were to be removed to some other place. Their life in Worcester had been far too pleasant for them to wish to run the risk of a less desirable place of confinement; and on the night of the twelfth, when the under-keeper of the jail entered their room, between nine and ten o'clock, to lock them in for the night, they suddenly seized him, held a pistol to his heart, and threatened him with instant death if he made the least noise or resistance. They then bound his hands and feet to the bed-post, tied a napkin over his mouth, and left the prison unobserved. In the course of half an hour he succeeded in extricating himself, and crawled to the jailer's house. The alarm was immediately given, and the town was thrown into as great a commotion as if the whole British army had descended upon it. Amid the firing of cannon, and the ringing of bells, horsemen were despatched in every direction, to try to find some trace of the fugitives, but without success; and before morning Major Snelling had issued handbills, offering a reward for their capture. The following notice appeared in the National Aegis of 19 January:—

500 Dollars Reward !

United States of America, }
District of Massachusetts, ss. }

WHEREAS on the evening of Wednesday the 12th inst. nine of the British Officers confined in the Goal at Worcester by order of the President of the United States, in retaliation of the wrongs done and committed on the persons of many of our citizens, now Prisoners of War among the enemy, made their escape therefrom—namely:

CHARLES DE VILLETTE, Major, 40 years of age, 5 feet 7 inches high, dark complexion.

WM. A. STEEL, Lt. 24 do. 5 feet 8 1-3 do. light do.

ARTHUR CARTER, do. 21 do. 5 ft. 7 3-4 do. light do.

JOSEPH F. GREEN, 26 do. 5 feet 10 do. light do.

This day Lazell & Grafton took my store, and began to sell my books on Commission.

13. Miss Calef and young Thayer went to Boston.

FRANCIS DECENTA, do. 33 do. 5 feet 8 do. dark do.
FREDERICK ZEHINDER, Captain, 38 do. 6 feet, dark do.
DAVID DUVAL, Lt. 18 do. 5 feet 6 do. light do.
ALBERT MANUEL, do. 5 feet 11 3-4 do. light do.
CHARLES MORRIS, do. 21 do. 6 feet 1 do. light do.

And it being of the highest importance to the personal safety of our said citizens that these British Officers should be secured and returned into custody, I do hereby offer a reward of FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS to any person or persons who may apprehend, detain and deliver over the said nine British prisoners to the Marshal or Deputy of any District, to any Military or Naval Commander, to myself or any of my deputies, and so in proportion to the number secured, with all reasonable charges.

And whereas there is just cause to believe that the said British Officers, detained as aforesaid, have received aid and comfort since their confinement, and are now secreted and assisted so as to effectuate their final escape, by evil disposed and corrupt citizens, who prefer the interest of the enemy to their own country—to such and to all others, I hereby warn them of the consequences resulting from such traitorous conduct as giving aid and comfort to a Publick Enemy, or his subjects, especially those situated as are these British Officers, and while I call on the good citizens of the nation to be active and zealous in the premises, I do also offer a reward of FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, to any person or persons, who, having knowledge of such traitorous conduct may give such information as may lead to a detection of the Traitors.

JAMES PRINCE, Marshal,
Massachusetts District.

Four were retaken the following evening near the meeting-house in Barre, and four succeeded in reaching Canada. At first the belief was general that they were concealed in the town, and the cry of "treason" was raised; but a thorough search proved this suspicion to be groundless. Early in February, Abijah Bigelow, his son Oliver and James W. Jenkins, Jr., all of Barre, were arrested on suspicion of having assisted the prisoners. The two former were taken before the United States District Court, in Boston, and the younger Bigelow was bound over to the May term of the Circuit Court. Before the opening of the term, there had been a general exchange of prisoners, and the matter was evidently dropped.

In 1830, Mr. Stephen Salisbury, 2nd, met and travelled in Italy, with Captain Arthur Carter, who declared that no American failed in his duty to his country, by aiding in their escape.

<sup>1</sup> In March, they were again removed to the Philadelphia Penitentiary, from which Duvall and Morris, with sixteen others, escaped 22 April. The greater part of them were recaptured, but almost at the same time, some of the American officers were released on parole, with a commission to inform the American government that the twenty-three prisoners sent to England had not been brought to trial, but remained on the ordinary footing of prisoners of war, which led to the dismissal, on parole, of all officers on both sides.

<sup>2</sup> The term "quorum," as used in commissions of justices of the peace, and others, received its name from the words of the commission, "quorum A. B. unum esse volumus," (of whom we will that A. B. be one), and signified originally certain individuals, selected for their ability and prudence, among several holding the same office, without whom the remainder could not act.

In 1774, while he was town clerk, the instructions of the town to Joshua Bigelow, its representative in the General Court, requiring him, among other things, to take a decided stand against the objectionable acts of Parliament, were vehemently opposed by the royalists, who petitioned for a special meeting, in the hope of securing a reconsideration of the resolutions. Failing in this they presented a loyal protest against them, signed by fifty-two inhabitants, which was also refused by the town, whereupon Mr. Chandler, who was one of the signers, secretly, and without authority, copied the protest upon the records, and also sent a copy to Boston, which was published in two of the newspapers. This so enraged the strong Whig majority, that in a special town meeting it was voted, "that the Town Clerk do, in the presence of the town, Obliterate, Erase, or otherwise deface the said recorded protest, and the names thereunto subscribed, so that it may become utterly illegible and unintelligible"; and he was forced, in open town meeting, not only to draw his pen through the records, but to dip his fingers in the ink and blot out the page.

In June, 1775, Mr. Chandler went to Nova Scotia, and on his return, in September, surrendered himself as a Tory. He was imprisoned by the committee on suspicion of having held intercourse with the enemy, but was released on parole in December, and permitted to live in Lancaster. He afterwards had a store at the corner of Main and Pleasant streets.

Mr. Chandler never married. He was extremely eccentric in his manner and dress, always wearing bright red small-clothes, and was the subject of the jeers and derision of those around him, which he rarely failed to repay with their full value.

the British took possession of the city. For the next two or three years his time was divided between school-teaching and military service, until, when he was twenty, he decided to enter a profession. The law was his first choice, and he began his studies with Judge Charles Chauncy, in New Haven; but finding that he required a higher classical education, he entered the sophomore class at Yale, in 1781, and was graduated in 1784. Abandoning the law, he prepared for the ministry with Rev. Jonathan Edwards. While he was a candidate, he was principal of an academy in Norwich. A decided Calvinist, he declined two calls during this period,—to the church in Hampton, Conn., and to become the colleague of Dr. Livingston, the minister of the Middle Dutch Church in New York—because he required a stricter creed than that of either society. In 1786 he became the minister of the church in Fair Haven, in the city of New Haven, but strong disapprobation of the so-called "half-way covenant" caused him to ask for dismissal at the end of three years, and he accepted a call to the First Church in Worcester, which had then been without a settled minister for six years. Immediately after his installation, 29 September, 1790, he began to give new vigor to the doctrinal basis of the church, and a new creed and covenant were adopted, whereby its orthodoxy was conformed to the strictest type.

In 1815 Dr. Austin accepted the presidency of the University of Vermont, which had been closed for three years by the war, and its buildings occupied as barraeks. He however retained his pastoral connection in Worcester, on account of a civil process which had been commenced in his name against the town, for the recovery of lands, and did not receive his dismissal until December, 1818. His untiring and steady labors in trying to bring the college back to its old standing greatly impaired his health, and feeling that he could not realize his expectations of usefulness to the institution, he resigned in 1821.

In 1822 he became the minister of a small and poor society in Newport, R. I., which had formerly been under Rev. Samuel Hopkins, giving to it his services; but increasing infirmities compelled him to retire, and he returned to Worcester in 1826. He afterwards preached in Millbury for a time. The death of his nephew and adopted son, with whom he lived, soon after, physical weakness and pecuniary losses, brought on mental troubles, and for the four years preceding his death he was a religious monomaniac.

Dr. Austin was undoubtedly the ablest and most distinguished of all the ministers who have occupied the pulpit of the First Parish. He devoted himself largely to the investigation of theological questions, and was often called to sit in councils on difficult cases. A man of strong convictions, he preached with great freedom on public affairs, and his fast day sermons especially, were noted, and often gave offence. One, preached at the beginning of the war, in July, 1812, caused great excitement, and he published it with the inscription on the title page: "Published from the press by the desire of some who heard it and liked it; by the desire of some who heard it and did not like it; and by the desire of others who did not hear it, but imagine they should not have liked it if they had." In 1808, he collected and published, at Worcester, the first complete edition of the works of the elder President Edwards, in eight volumes.

He was one of the founders of the Massachusetts Missionary Society; was active in originating the General Association of Massachusetts; was a member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and was one of the projectors of and a contributor to the "Panoplist." He received the degree of D.D. from Williams, in 1807. Dr Austin married, in 1788, Jerusha, daughter of Dr. Samuel Hopkins of Hadley, Mass.

<sup>1</sup>This fire which broke out on the evening of 22 December, 1813, burned for six hours and swept everything before it to the water's edge, destroying one hundred and eighty dwelling houses and sixty-four other buildings. The loss was nearly three hundred thousand dollars, and over seventy-seven thousand dollars was contributed by towns all over New England, and even farther south, for the relief of the sufferers. Portsmouth had been unusually unfortunate in her losses by fire, for 26 December, 1802, one hundred and eighteen buildings were destroyed, and 24 December, 1806, twenty-four.

<sup>2</sup>Timothy Alden, the son of Rev. Timothy Alden, of Yarmouth, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1791, and from 1799 to 1805 was the minister of the Congregational church in Portsmouth, N. H. He also taught school in that town from 1800 to 1808 and at the academy in Newark, N. J., from 1810 to 1817. In 1817 he founded Alleghany College, in Meadville, Penn., was its first president, and collected for it a valuable library. In 1831 want of patronage caused him to resign, and in the following year he again devoted himself to educational work in Cincinnati, and three years later was the principal of an academy in East Liberty, near Pittsburg.

[Born, Yarmouth, 28 August, 1771.

Died, Pittsburg, Penn., 5 July, 1839.]

<sup>1</sup>Jedidiah Morse, the son of Jedidiah and Sarah Morse, of Woodstock, Conn., was graduated from Yale in 1783, and while studying theology under Jonathan Edwards and Samuel Watts, opened a young ladies' school in New Haven, and was for a time a tutor at Yale. No school geography having been printed in America up to this time, he prepared one in manuscript, which was copied by his pupils, and thus the study of geography was introduced into the schools of this country. He enlarged the work, which in March, 1784, was printed in 18mo, in New Haven, and for fifteen or twenty years it was the text-book in the common schools generally throughout the country. This was the beginning of a series of geographies and gazetteers which not only became celebrated in America, but in Europe, where his larger geographical works were reprinted.

From 1789 to 1820 he was the minister of the Congregational church in Charlestown, Mass., and during his pastorate was prominently engaged in the Unitarian controversy. He was the principal founder of the "Panoplist, or Christian Armory," in 1803, a Calvinistic publication, and of the "Boston Recorder"; and was one of the principal agents in founding the Theological Seminary in Andover. He was also influential in promoting the construction of the Middlesex Canal. After leaving Charlestown, in 1820, he was commissioned by the government to visit the Indian tribes in the northwest, and one result of his work, entitled "Indian Report," was published in 1822. Among his other works are a "Compendious History of New England" and "Annals of the American Revolution."

Dr. Morse received the degree of A.M. from Princeton, in 1787, and that of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1794. As minister of the church in Charles-

<sup>1</sup> David Cobb was graduated from Harvard in 1766 and for many years was a practising physician. He was secretary of the Bristol County convention in 1774, and in the following year he was a member of the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts. He served as a lieutenant-colonel during the Revolution; was afterwards a major-general of militia; a justice of the Court of Common Pleas; a representative in Congress from 1793 to 1795; a member of the Massachusetts Senate and House, and the presiding officer of both branches; a member of the Executive Council; lieutenant-governor in 1809; chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas, while a resident of Maine, from 1796 to 1820; and major-general of the 10th military division, and a member of the Board of Military Defence during the war of 1812. <sup>2</sup> William Bentley, the son of Joshua and Elizabeth Paine Bentley, of Boston, was graduated from Harvard in 1777, where, after taking his master's degree, in 1780, he was for three years a tutor in Greek and Latin. 24 September, 1783, he was ordained over the Second, or East Church, in Salem, as colleague to Rev. James Diman, and on the death of the latter in 1788, became sole minister. He had been educated in the Calvinistic belief, but his views gradually changed, until he became a decided and avowed Unitarian. His doctrines were few and simple, and in his ministerial character he always avoided an intimate connection with every theological sect. His sermons were marked by a good deal of freedom and originality, and among his many harmless eccentricities was a fondness for selecting odd texts, which he adapted to the current topics of the time in a way which was sometimes thought to be irreverent; and on the Sunday afternoon when the frigate "Constitution" was chased into Marblehead harbor by two British frigates, he is said to have dismissed his congregation, marched to that place, and on his return preached a sermon from the text, "There go the ships!" He was also actively interested in politics, being a warm supporter of the Republican party from the time of its formation in 1801. From 1794 to 1797 he wrote a weekly summary of the news for the Salem Gazette, and was the editor of the Salem Register from its establishment, in 1800, to his death.

He was a devoted student of American history, and was an accomplished linguist, knowing well more than twenty languages, and having some familiarity with several others; and in acquiring this knowledge, he collected a large library and cabinet, and many valuable manuscripts. With the exception of his theological and scientific books, which were given to Alleghany College, his library, paintings, engravings and the greater part of his manuscripts he left to the American Antiquarian Society. In 1805 Dr. Bentley was offered and declined the presidency of the University of Virginia. He received the honorary degree of A.M. from Dartmouth, in 1787, and that of D.D. from Harvard, in 1819, a few months before his death; and was a member of the American Antiquarian, Massachusetts Historical and American Philosophical Societies.

<sup>1</sup> Soon after the liberation of Holland from the rule of Napoleon, in November, 1813, her former diplomatic relations with this country were renewed, and on 22 May, 1814, M. Changuion, the newly appointed "Minister Plenipotentiary of his Royal Highness the Prince of Orange, Sovereign of the United Provinces of the Low Countries to the United States of America," sailed from Helvoetsluys, with his family and suite, for New York. Driven by contrary winds, the vessels were compelled to put into Marblehead, on Thursday, 28 July, and preparations were immediately begun for his reception in Boston. A cavalcade, to escort him from Marblehead, was at first planned, but he determined to go by water, and entered the outer harbor on Saturday morning. As soon as his arrival was known a committee, consisting of Thomas Lindall Winthrop, Richard Sullivan and William Sturgis, went in the barge of the "Constitution" to "inform his Excellency of the mark of respectful attention which the citizens of Boston contemplated, and to ascertain the time when he would wish to make his landing." On account of the Sabbath, this was deferred until Monday morning, at eleven o'clock. On Sunday the vessels entered the port, saluting Fort Independence with thirteen guns, which it immediately returned, and their salute to the town, on coming to anchor, was answered by the "Constitution." At the appointed hour on Monday, M. Changuion was received at India street by the selectmen and the committee of arrangements, under a federal salute by the "Washington Artillery," and the enthusiastic cheers of an immense crowd, which filled the adjacent streets, wharves and buildings. He was driven, under military escort, through a number of the principal streets, to the residence of John Coffin Jones, the chairman of the committee of arrangements, in Hanover street, where, after receiving the marching salute of the troops, an address of congratulation and welcome was presented to him, and a reception held in his honor.

Mr. Brown is most widely known as the patron of Brown University, and within a few years after his graduation, he began a long series of benefactions to that institution by the gift of a valuable law library; and in 1804, founded a chair of oratory and belles-lettres. In recognition of these gifts, and of his continued interest, the corporation of the college, in 1804, changed its name to Brown University. In 1822, he built a second college building, Hope College, named in honor of his sister; in 1834, Manning Hall; and gave generously towards the erection of Rhode Island Hall and the president's house. He was a member of its board of trustees from 1791 to 1825; its treasurer from 1796 to 1825; and a fellow from 1825 to 1841.

His gifts were not confined to the University, however, and he was one of the founders of the Providence Athenæum and of the Butler Hospital for the Insane, and gave liberally to the building of churches and to the endowment of colleges and academies.

He was for fourteen years a member of the Rhode Island Legislature, serving in both its branches, and was a presidential elector in 1840.

Died, Providence, 27 October, 1841.]

<sup>2</sup> Stephen Gano, the son of Rev. John and Sarah Stites Gano, of New York, being unable to obtain a college education, studied medicine, and in 1781 and 1782 was a surgeon in the Continental army. For the next four years he practised in Tappan, N. Y., but in 1783 he became "hopefully pious," and was impressed with the idea that it was his duty to preach the gospel. He was ordained a Baptist clergyman in 1786, and from 1792 to 1828, was the minister of the First Baptist Church in Providence. He was a trustee of Brown from 1794 to 1828, from which he received the honorary degree of A.M. in 1800.

[Born, New York, 25 December, 1762.

Died, Providence, 18 August, 1828.]

<sup>3</sup> Thomas Lloyd Halsey was graduated from Brown in 1793, was for many years a merchant in Providence, and at one time was United States Consul at Buenos Ayres. He was a trustee of Brown from 1809 to 1839.

[Born, 1776.

Died, Providence, 2 February, 1855.]

Got several books for the Antiquarian Society. Put up at Chapatan's hotel—Paid him 13 dollars for common fare for 1 day.

2. Sat out for Worcester with Lawrence in the Coach, accompanied by my son, and his daughter Augusta by the way of Douglas,—arrived at home at 5 o'clock afternoon—A very heavy thunder shower met us within a mile of my house.

5. Flagg—the man I hired sick several days.

6. Walked over to the farm.

7. Went to Chh. in the afternoon.

8. My Grand daughter Augusta went to School. Her father went to Boston. Flagg has been unwell a week and done no work yet. Exceedingly heavy Rain all day—raised a Flood, which carried Roads, Bridges, Dams, &c. 20 feet by 15 of the Causeway on the Turnpike to Boston, of the whole width of the Causeway, behind the first Chandler's hill, near the street Worcester, carried away.

9. A strong and brilliant Rainbow this morning at 3 quarters after 5 o'clock. Mrs. Myeall and her Son Capt. Chandler visited us from Cambridge port.

10. Mrs. Myeall & her Son returned home. Got in 3 Loads of Oats. Blood has worked 2 days. Charles Fennimer one day. Mrs. Gooch came up from Boston to live with us.

11. Finished reaping Oats.

12. Mr. Sam<sup>l</sup>. Armstrong and wife from Boston. Went to Lancaster.

13. Flagg began to work again. Fair. Warm. Bathed.

14. Went to Chh. twice.

15. Mrs. Frazer unwell and continued so during the week. Had a Physician.

16. Mr. S. Armstrong & wife came from Lancaster.

17. Mr. & Mrs. Armstrong went to Boston.

18. My son and Mr. Manning came from Boston in a Chaise in season to dine, and tarried with me.

20. My son & Mr. Manning went to Boston. Mr. Soper came up in the Stage—dined with me and went on for N. York. Frazer rode out. Yesterday N. Patch was taken unwell and went home.

21. Went to Chh. twice. Mrs. Seaver & Miss Maccarty dined.

23. My friend, John Carter, Esq. Printer, in Providence, R. I. died this week aged 69. Court of Com. Pleas.

<sup>1</sup>John Wheelock, the son of Eleazer Wheelock, the founder and first president of Dartmouth College, entered Yale in 1767, but removed to Hanover with his father two years later, and was graduated from Dartmouth with its first class, in 1771. He was a member of the Provincial Congress in 1774, and of the Assembly in 1775. In the spring of 1777 he was appointed a major in the New York forces, and in the following November was made a lieutenant-colonel. In 1778 General Stark sent him on an expedition against the Indians, after which he was on General Gates's staff until, in 1779, at the age of twenty-five, he was recalled to Dartmouth to succeed his father. In 1782 he was appointed professor of civil and ecclesiastical history, and in 1784 was sent to Europe by the trustees, in the financial interests of the college, but on his return he was wrecked off Cape Cod, and lost the box containing his money and papers. In 1815, in consequence of an ecclesiastical controversy among the trustees, he was removed from the presidency, and a legislative act was passed, enlarging the board, and changing the name of the institution to "Dartmouth University." This resulted in the celebrated "Dartmouth College case," in which Webster gained great reputation, and by which the act was declared unconstitutional. He was reinstated in office by a new board of trustees in 1817, a few weeks before his death.

Dr. Wheelock received the degree of LL.D. from Dartmouth, in 1789. He married, 29 November, 1786, Maria, daughter of Governor Christian Suhm, of St. Thomas, W. I. He left a large estate, half of which he bequeathed to Princeton Theological Seminary.

<sup>1</sup> William Allen, the son of Rev. Thomas Allen, of Pittsfield, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1802, and after being licensed, in 1804, preached for some months in various places in western New York. After his father's death, in 1810, he was ordained over the church in Pittsfield; succeeded Dr. Wheelock as president of Dartmouth in 1817; and was president of Bowdoin from 1820 to 1839. While assistant librarian of Harvard, from 1804 to 1807, he prepared an "American Biographical and Historical Dictionary," the first work of the kind published in the United States, which appeared in 1809 and had two later editions, in 1832 and 1857; and was also the author of several smaller biographical and historical works. He received the degree of D.D. from Dartmouth, in 1820.

Dr. Allen married, in 1812, Maria Malleville, daughter of President John Wheelock. [Born, Pittsfield, 2 January, 1784. Died, Northampton, 16 July, 1868.]

<sup>2</sup> David Humphreys, the son of Rev. Daniel and Sarah Bowers Humphreys, of Derby, Conn., was graduated from Yale in 1771; entered the Continental army as captain at the beginning of the Revolution; served on the staff of General Putnam; and was aide and secretary to Washington, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. At the surrender of Cornwallis he was allowed the honor of receiving the British colors, and was afterwards presented by Congress with a sword for his gallantry at the siege of Yorktown. From 1784 to 1786 he was secretary of legation to Franklin, Jefferson and Adams in Paris and London. He served in the Connecticut Legislature from 1786 to 1788, after which he lived at Mount Vernon until his appointment as the first United States minister to Portugal, in 1790. While in Portugal he was commissioner plenipotentiary to Algiers with general oversight over the Barbary States, from 1795 to 1797, when he was transferred to the Court of Madrid as minister plenipotentiary and retained this post until 1802.

During the war of 1812 he served as brigadier-general of Connecticut volunteers, and as a member of the Legislature was active in promoting measures of defence, <sup>1</sup> Ward Nicholas Boylston [Ward Hallowell], the son of Benjamin and Mary Boylston Hallowell, of Boston, received his education in the public schools of Boston. In March, 1770, at the request of his uncle, Nicholas Boylston, by a royal license he dropped the name of Hallowell, and added to his Christian name that of his uncle. In 1773, on account of ill health, he commenced a journey through Europe and Asia, and from 1775 to 1800, was in business in London. After his return, in the latter year, he spent the greater part of his time in Princeton, spending the winter months at his seat in Jamaica Plain. Soon after his arrival in Boston, he confirmed to Harvard the bequest of Nicholas Boylston, amounting to over twenty-three thousand dollars, as a foundation for the professorship of rhetoric and oratory, on the condition that John Quincy Adams should be appointed to that chair. Two years later he secured to the same institution an annuity of one hundred dollars, to be distributed as prizes for the discussion of medical questions; and later a further annuity of sixty dollars, for prizes in elocution, for undergraduates. He also gave five hundred dollars as a fund for additions to the library.

<sup>2</sup> After the refusal of Congress to recharter the United States Bank, in 1811, the individual states quickly seized the opportunity thus presented, of establishing state banks, and between 1811 and 1816, their number had increased from eighty-eight to two hundred and forty-six. A large number of "Wildcat Banks" came into existence, especially in the South and West, which inflated their issues to such an extent, that by the summer of 1814, the currency was in an almost hopelessly deranged condition. The burning of Washington and the attack on Baltimore were followed by a financial panic, in which specie payments were suspended by every bank in the country outside of New England, which had been more conservative in its methods, and was thus enabled to withstand the strain.

<sup>1</sup> In the spring of 1814, the British began to extend their policy of coast descents to New England, accompanied by burning and pillage, and the frequent reports of large ships of war off the coast of Massachusetts, kept Boston in a continual state of ferment. The town was in an utterly defenceless condition, for owing to bitter quarrels with the federal authorities in regard to the war, no help had been given, the federal troops had been withdrawn from the coast, and her forts were almost useless; so that when the news reached Boston, 19 April, that a British squadron of eight vessels had been sighted off Gloucester, defensive measures were immediately begun, and a code of signals was adopted in case of an attack: by day, two guns fired in quick succession, and a red flag hoisted at the Navy Yard; by night three guns, and two lanterns hoisted perpendicularly in the Navy Yard; and at both times the bells of the churches were to be tolled for half an hour.

By 27 June, there was a general feeling of alarm; but it was not until two months later that any energetic measures were taken. 24 August, a petition from a number of citizens to the selectmen, suggesting that a town meeting be called to consider the advisability of providing means of defence, was refused on the grounds that that body had full confidence in the executive, and that it would be unwise to excite alarm, by calling such a meeting; whereupon, on 30 August, a committee, consisting of Harrison Gray Otis, Thomas Handasyd Perkins, James Lloyd and others, was appointed to present a petition to the governor; and at a public meeting in Faneuil Hall, 3 September, it was voted that the citizens would cheerfully and cordially co-operate with his Excellency in any measures of defence which might be devised, in which their services might be useful; and that when necessary they would make prompt arrangements for the employment of all classes of their fellow-citizens, in the construction of fortifications, or other means of defence, and in obtaining contributions. Governor Strong acted promptly, and on 6 September ordered the entire militia of the state to hold itself in readiness for service, and called certain companies immediately to Boston. On the following day he issued a proclamation, convening the General Court on 5 October; and a few days later, appointed a "Board of Commissioners for Sea Coast Defence," consisting of David Cobb, chairman, John Brooks, Timothy Pickering, Israel Thorndike and Thomas Handasyd Perkins. A new fort—"Fort Strong"—on Noddle's Island (now East Boston); two at Dorchester Heights; a water battery at Dorchester Point; a battery at Commercial Point; and field works at Savin Hill were at once projected. Loammi Baldwin was chief of construction, and 10 September he issued a call for tools, and for volunteers to aid in the work. The answer to this appeal was overwhelming. The Suffolk Bar; the Boston Medical Association; the Charitable Mechanics Association; the schoolmasters; the students of Harvard College; the several companies of the militia; the Long Wharf and India Wharf merchants; the mechanics and manufacturers; the dealers in dry goods and hardware; the printers, book-sellers and binders; the housewrights; the brick and stone layers; the sailors from the Navy Yard,—every profession, trade and class of citizens organized in bands, chose captains, and offered their services. The Columbian Centinel of 17 September contains the notice that "The Members of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company (not on duty.) will meet at Faneuil Hall on Tuesday Morning next, at 6 o'clock—each Man will bring with him a good Shovel, Spade or Mattock to perform one day's work on Fort Strong." On one day the venerable Dr. Lathrop was seen, with the deacons and elders of his church, shovelling and carrying sods in wheelbarrows; on another Bishop Cheverus and two hundred and fifty of his congregation labored on Dorchester Heights. Nor did the citizens of Boston alone come forward, but companies from all the surrounding towns marched to Boston and performed their allotted work; while in every part of the state those exempt from military duty enrolled and armed themselves. So quickly and steadily did the work go on, that on 26 October, Fort Strong was formally named by Lieutenant-Governor Phillips. By the time that the remaining works were completed, however, in the early part of November, the British commander had sailed to the southward, the alarm died away, and the troops were soon after dismissed.

19. My brother returned to Lancaster. Convention of Ministers and Delegates in Worcester respecting observance of the Sabbath.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rev. Micah Stone was the minister of the church in Brookfield, from 1801 to 1827, when the church became Unitarian, and he was succeeded by Rev. George R. Noyes, afterwards of the Harvard Divinity School. A new society, the "Evangelical Society" was then formed, and Mr. Stone was its minister until his death, in 1852.

<sup>2</sup> This convention met in the Court House, in response to a notice issued by Revs. Joseph Avery, John Crane, Samuel Austin, James Murdoek and Andrew Peters; and after the election of Rev. Reuben Puffer as moderator, and Rev. James Murdoek as scribe, it was unanimously resolved, "that we will now form ourselves into a society for the purpose of aiding the peace-officers in the execution of the laws of this commonwealth, enacted to prevent immoralities generally, and particularly profanity, intemperance, and Sabbath-breaking; and of restoring, by united exertions, as far as we can, purity of morals." A constitution was then adopted, the officers chosen, and the name of the society fixed as "The Society in the County of Worcester for the Reformation of Morals." A committee of the council, consisting of Samuel Austin, Samuel M. Burnside and Bradford Sumner, presented a set of resolutions, in part as follows:—

"WHEREAS, in the prosecution of the important object of this society, it is indispensable that the members themselves be exemplary, and be not liable to have imputed to them, in any measure, the irregularities they aim to correct; and that their exertions be uniform, in concert, prudent, and efficacious; therefore,

"Resolved, That we will constantly watch against every manner of speech, partaking of the nature of profanity, and will reprove, and prevent, to the utmost of our power, all profanity in those subject to our care and authority; and that we will not knowingly use distilled spirits, either in a pure or mixed state, except when it shall be deemed necessary, as a temporary restorative, and to the mitigation or removal of disease; and, if we cannot persuade those employed in our service to be satisfied with milder liquors, and drinks which do not expose to inebriation, we will constantly and faithfully exert our influence to prevent their using ardent spirits to excess; and that we will sanctify the Sabbath, by abstaining from all work, travel, pastime and indulgence, opposed to, and interruptive of, the holy rest of that day; and, as far as we can, cause all under our care to respect the instructions of the scriptures, and the laws of the commonwealth relative to a due observance of the Sabbath. That we will, to the utmost of our influence, promote, in the respective towns in which we live, the choice of persons of zeal for reform, of firmness and faithfulness, to the office of tythingmen, and in sufficient numbers to proceed with confidence and effect in the execution of the laws against the disorders which it is our object to correct.”

3. Carpenter began fixing up the old Printing house, to be again occupied for printing. Mr. Manning<sup>1</sup> having hired it for that purpose.

<sup>1</sup> William Manning, the son of Joseph and Mary Allen Manning, served his apprenticeship with Bennet Wheeler, a printer in Providence, and after coming of age, was employed for some years in Mr. Thomas's office in Worcester. In 1794, with James Loring, he opened a printing office in Spring lane, in Boston, and began the publication of works for the booksellers, and the firm of "Manning and Loring" soon became extensively known. In 1800, they commenced bookselling and publishing on their own account, at the sign of "Washington's Head," at the corner of Spring lane and Washington street (Cornhill). This partnership lasted until 1813, and in October, 1814, Mr. Manning succeeded Isaac Sturtevant, as the publisher of the Massachusetts Spy. In October, 1819, he entered into partnership with George A. Trumbull, under the firm name of "Manning and Trumbull"; and on the latter's retirement, in January, 1822, his son, Samuel B.<sup>1</sup> Manning, was associated with him for a few months, and he was then again the sole publisher until August, 1823. A month later he printed the first number of the Massachusetts Yeoman, for its editor, Austin Denny, and published it until March, 1828. He then continued as a book and general printer, but soon removed his business to Boston, where letters to and from Increase, Cotton and Samuel Mather.

It also contained a great number and variety of manuscript productions of the Mathers: the original draft of the Cambridge platform, by Richard Mather, from which that adopted by the Synod was mainly taken, and also the platform as adopted, in Richard Mather's handwriting, which are regarded as of great theological interest, as showing what the Synod accepted and rejected; an autobiography written by Increase Mather for his children, and his diaries in interleaved almanacs; the diaries of Cotton Mather for 1692, 1696, 1699, 1703, 1709, 1711, 1713 and 1717, essays, large and small, among them a work of considerable size, called "Triparadisus," which contains Cotton Mather's views upon several theological questions much discussed at that period, and which is spoken of in Samuel Mather's life of his father, as having been sent to England to be published, but the bookseller being dead, it was not known what had become of the manuscript; and an elaborate medical work by Cotton Mather, entitled "The Angel of Bethesda, an Essay upon the Common Maladies of Mankind," written at a time when physicians were scarce and ministers were almost universally practitioners.

In addition to these there were miscellaneous parcels, memorandum books and a large mass of material written by the Mathers for public or private use.

21. Attended a Com<sup>ee</sup>. of the Grand Lodge on the removal of the Morning Star Lodge to Leicester.

22. Went to Bank.

27. No meeting at the N. Parish.

28. Some Sleighing the first in Worcester this Season. A very considerable Shock of an Earthquake was felt this Evening. It extended from the Connecticut to the Merrimack. Have not heard from a greater distance. Have been engaged in taking a Catalogue and putting the books in order of the Mather Library<sup>1</sup> for the last 8 days, have not been abroad for the last six days. Proprietors of the Tanyard met this Evening at my house. Our Agent proves unfaithful. Voted to dissolve the present firm. Paid for my son this year, and am bound to pay for him 12,000.

29. This Evening heard of the Death of the Hon. Elbridge Gerry, at Washington, Vice President of the United States.

30. Have continued putting the Mather Library in order. Have done little else for a fortnight. Did not attend the Bank yesterday. The Proprietors of the Tanyard met again at my house this Evening—agreed to continue the business, under a new firm, and a new Agent—Purchased the real Estate of one of the Proprietors of the Tannery. There will be now five proprietors instead of six as formerly.

January, 1815.

1. Went to Church twice.

2. Paid Mrs. Gooch, our Cook, and dismissed her at her request. Attended at the Bank this morning—at the Tanyard in the afternoon—and at the Fire Club in the Evening at which we supped—was chosen Chairman.

Our Convention at the Tanyard was dissolved by Contract, the first day of this month. Our Agent for the last five years,—by negligence has made the business very unprofitable; he has caused our Stock, &c. to be 10000 Dollars less this year than it was the last year.

3. Attended at the Bank—no discount. The State has borrowed of us 30,000 dollars, which by charter we were obliged to loan to it, a 5 pr. ct. interest, and we are obliged to allow them one per cent. yearly on our capital.<sup>1</sup>

Attended at the Tanyard again this Evening, we talk of forming a new Company.

4. My grand daughter Mary Rebecca went to a Ball.

5. A fire broke out this forenoon in a Factory opposite to my house, but adjoining the Brook, belonging to Williams & Earle Carding Machine Manufacturers, &c. The building which was large, and of wood was wholly destroyed.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> By the renewed charter of the Worcester Bank, in 1812, the state could call upon it at any time, for a loan of any sum not exceeding ten per cent. of the amount of the capital stock paid in, to be repaid in five annual instalments, or at a shorter period, at the election of the state, with interest at five per cent.; but it could not borrow more than twenty per cent. of the capital stock, without the consent of the corporation.

The bank was also required to pay a tax of one-half of one per cent. on the amount of the original stock, within ten days after each semi-annual dividend, provided that a like tax should be required of all banks afterwards incorporated, and that the right of the General Court to lay a tax upon any bank already incorporated, should not be impaired.

<sup>1</sup> The National Aegis of 15 February, says: "On the receipt of the late glorious intelligence from New Orleans in this town, a National Salute was fired and the bells rung for one hour. The expressions of joy were enthusiastick and almost universal. National pride absorbed party distinctions—and the citizens seemed to have forgotten whether they were Republicans or Federalists, remembering that they were all Americans and that they had one common country whose fate they must share, in whose adversity they must all suffer and in whose triumph they ought to feel equal interest and exultation. When the still more vivifying intelligence of PEACE arrived, their transports could hardly be restrained within the bounds of moderation. Business was suspended and people of every age, sex, party and condition united in manifestations of the most heart-felt joy. Mutual congratulations and reciprocal engagements to drown past animosities in oblivion appeared to knit all men together by the ties of friendship and patriotism. May this happy unanimity long prevail, and in future may the only rivalship of parties be a noble emulation in exertions for the best good of our beloved country. National Salutes were fired on Monday (eighteen guns in each quarter of the town), and repeated yesterday, and the bells again rang a merry peal."

<sup>2</sup> The laws of the society, as adopted 13 January, 1815, provided that the council should consist of two sub-councils, of five members each, of the councillors chosen for the several states, and of those for Plymouth and Maine. One sub-council, composed of members living in the vicinity of the library, was required to manage the immediate concerns of the library and cabinet; to meet monthly to consult on measures for the benefit of the society; and once in three months to make a thorough examination of the library and cabinet and report their proceedings to the council. The duties of the members of the second sub-council who lived in or near Boston, were to consult on the general concerns of the society, and to make a like report to the council. This was the first meeting of the local sub-council.

<sup>1</sup> Samuel Brazer began life as a baker in Charlestown, but being burned out when the British destroyed the town, he removed to Worcester, and opened a bakery on the west side of Main street, nearly opposite the Central Hotel, which not only supplied most of the stores in Worcester County, but many of those in the neighboring towns of Middlesex. He later added to his business a retail trade in English goods and crockery, and in October, 1785, advertised for sale, "At the Sign of the Old Maid," a general assortment of crockery ware, flour, biscuit and gingerbread. In 1798 he relinquished the bakery and confined his stock to West India goods and general merchandize. After acquiring a large fortune, he subsequently lost it by the conveyance of real estate in Boston, to which the title proved defective, and he was compelled to spend two years in a debtor's prison, from which he had been released but a short time before this fire occurred. With his share of the contributions collected for the sufferers by the fire he built the large brick house of two tenements, which was afterwards owned and occupied by William Dickinson. Re-opening his store in the basement, he succeeded in extricating himself from embarrassment, and in a few years was enabled to retire from business.

Mr. Brazer married Betsey, daughter of James Allen, of Wendell, Mass.

Died, Worcester, 10 August, 1835.]

<sup>2</sup> Rejoice Newton, the son of Isaac and Hester Grennell Newton, of Greenfield, Mass., was graduated from Dartmouth in 1807, studied law with Judge Newcomb and Elijah H. Mills, in Greenfield, and was admitted to the bar in Hampshire County in 1810. He settled in Worcester, and until 1814, was a partner of Francis Blake. In 1818 he succeeded William Charles White, as County Attorney, but resigned in 1825. In the following year he formed a partnership with William Lincoln, which lasted for many years, and he was also at one time associated with Edwin Conant. In 1842 he was appointed Commissioner in Bankruptcy, serving until the law under which the appointment was made, was repealed, in 1856. He was a representative to the General Court in 1829, 1830 and 1831, and a member of the Senate in 1834.

Mr. Newton married, 24 April, 1817, Rebecca, daughter of Levi and Martha Waldo Lincoln.

Died, Worcester, 4 February, 1868.]

about two o'clock in the afternoon, and the driving snow so impeded the efforts of the firemen, and a furious north wind spread the flames so rapidly, that it threatened to destroy the whole south part of the town. Immediately after the fire, a committee, consisting of Joseph Allen, Benjamin Heywood, Daniel Waldo, Samuel Austin, Aaron Bancroft, William Stedman and Levi Lincoln, Jr., was appointed to solicit and receive contributions for the relief of the sufferers; and as was customary at that time, a circular asking for aid, was sent to the different clergymen in the county, to be read from their pulpits on the following Sunday. Twenty-seven hundred dollars were subscribed by the citizens of Worcester, and eighteen hundred dollars were sent from other places for this purpose.

<sup>1</sup> For many years the Barbary States, and especially Algiers, had been accustomed to send out piratical vessels to prey upon the commerce of other nations, which had been obliged to pay an annual tribute as a ransom for the prisoners taken by them. Since the outbreak of the war of 1812, the Dey of Algiers, thinking that our navy was crippled, became more insolent in his demands, and finally declared war. Commodore Decatur was sent with a squadron of eleven ships to the Mediterranean, and before the Dey had learned of his setting out, had captured two of his vessels, and taking him by surprise, not only frightened him into releasing his American prisoners, but forced him to sign a treaty abolishing the tribute. He then required Tunis and Tripoli to make indemnity for violations of their neutrality during the war. Meanwhile the European governments continued submissively to pay tribute.

2. Training.<sup>1</sup> Attended at the Bank.

<sup>1</sup>“Training Day” was our first holiday, its origin dating back to the earliest days of the Massachusetts Colony, when the different towns were required to keep watches and wards for their defence. Consequently in these towns military bands were formed, organized into districts, which were in reality the military wards, where the watches were kept. At first company trainings were held every Saturday; then every month; and then eight times a year. They began at one o'clock in the afternoon, and were opened and closed with prayer. The only music was that of the drum. All between the ages of sixteen and sixty were required to perform military service, magistrates and ministers alone being exempt; but as the population of the colony grew, this list was gradually increased. Each man was required to furnish his own arms and powder, and the fines for neglecting to do this and for absence from military duty were severe. Up to the year 1693, no regular uniform was required. An office in the militia was a much coveted honor, even as late as the early part of the last century. When John Hull, a Boston merchant, was made a corporal, in 1648, he praised God for giving him acceptance and favor in the eyes of His people, and, as a fruit thereof, advancement above his deserts; and on his promotion to an ensignship, six years later, recorded his prayer, "beseeching that the good Lord, who only can, would please to make me able and fit for, and faithful in, the place I am called unto, that I may, with a spirit of wisdom and humility, love and faithfulness, obey my superiors, and also be exemplary and faithful to my inferiors."

Although these days took the form of regular holidays, the training itself was no mere playing at soldiers, but a serious study for the public defence; and the importance attached to the volunteer militia is shown by the pages of regulations devoted to it in the Acts and Resolves. Winthrop says in his Journal, 15 September, 1641: "a great training commenced in Boston, which continued two days. About twelve hundred men were exercised, in most sorts of land service. Yet it was observed that there was no man drunk, though there was plenty of wine and strong beer in the town, not an oath sworn, no quarrel, nor any hurt done." After the regular exercises of the day, the chief amusement was firing at a mark, when a prize was often offered by some wealthy man in the town,—usually a silk handkerchief, or more rarely a silver shoe-buckle.

In the relaxation following the peace of 1783, when other questions were occupying the minds of the people, the militia was neglected. The state and national constitutions also made some changes in the laws governing it. Only those between the ages of eighteen and forty-five were liable to military duty. Instead of training eight times a year, each captain was required to parade his company for inspection, for correcting the company roll and for choosing officers, on the first Tuesday in May, from which the term "May training" is derived; and in September or October the general brigade musters were held. The war of 1812 caused a temporary revival of military ardor, but after its close the training soon became a mere form. Fearon, the English traveller, describes one in the streets of Pittsfield, in 1817, in which there was no attempt at discipline, no uniforms were worn, making it difficult to distinguish the officers, and the arms were sticks, umbrellas and muskets. At the church door many of the men were drinking cider, all were talking, and each one seemed to do as he pleased. The day finally became so great a farce, that in a few years it was discontinued as a holiday. On the reorganization of the system, and the creation of an active, as well as an enrolled militia, in 1840, the "May Training Day" gave place to the "May Inspection," on the last Wednesday in May. This, in turn, has been changed, by various orders, to the present annual drill, which is held at the discretion of the commanding officers.

<sup>1</sup> This well-known picture of Samoset welcoming the Englishmen, by Colonel Henry Sargent, of Boston, was exhibited at this time, in the great hall of the Exchange Coffee House. It was afterwards presented by the artist to the Pilgrim Society, and now hangs in Pilgrim Hall, in Plymouth.

<sup>2</sup> Samuel Jackson Prescott, the son of Dr. Oliver and Lydia Baldwin Prescott, of Groton, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1795, and studied law in the office of William Prescott, in Boston. Soon after his admission to the bar deafness compelled him to give up his practice, and he was for some years a dry goods merchant in Boston, but was unsuccessful, owing to the embargo of 1807, and the war of 1812. He then devoted himself to genealogical and statistical study, and compiled the index for the triennial catalogue of Harvard, which was first published in the issue of 1830.

Mr. Prescott received the degree of A.M. from Harvard, and from the College of New Jersey, in 1816; and that of LL.D. from Aberdeen. He was elected a member of the American Antiquarian Society in June, 1813, and was a member of the Council from 1814 to 1819.

[Born, Groton, 15 March, 1773. Died, Brookline, Mass., 7 February, 1857.]

<sup>1</sup> The General Court passed an act, 15 February, 1815, granting to the society two copies of all state documents. A similar act, granting to it one copy of all public documents, had been passed by Congress, 1 December, 1814.

<sup>2</sup> Captain Charles Stewart, the commander of the "Constitution," had just returned from a successful cruise in the southern Atlantic, having captured the British frigates "Cyane" and "Levant." He landed first at New York, where he was entertained with municipal honors, and a gold box containing the freedom of the city was presented to him. He landed at Boston under a federal salute, and was escorted by the "Boston Fusileers" and the "Winslow Blues" through streets decorated with bunting and flags, to the Exchange Coffee House, where a reception and dinner were given in his honor. For his gallantry on this cruise, Congress voted to him and his men the thanks of the nation, and presented to him a gold medal commemorative of the capture of the two frigates; and the Legislature of Pennsylvania gave to him a gold-hilted sword.

Dined at Eaton's in Framingham, arrived at home at  $\frac{1}{2}$  past 6 o'clock.

N. B. The affair with F. mentioned 17th of April has been thoroughly canvassed—and a very solemn promise of conducting with more propriety in future given.

estate of John Chandler, which had been bought by his father, at the close of the Revolution. In 1823 he was appointed one of the commissioners on the part of Massachusetts, for the survey and construction of the Blackstone Canal, and was one of the first board of directors of the company. He represented Worcester in the General Court in 1825 and 1826, and was a member of the Senate from 1827 to 1832. From 1844 to 1851 he was sheriff of Worcester County, and during his term of office many reforms were introduced in the management of the jail, one of the most important being the establishment of a chapel, with regular Sunday services. Mr. Lincoln also held many offices of local importance. He was chairman of the board of selectmen for many years, and when Worcester became a city, in 1848, was a member of the first board of aldermen; was one of the originators and the first president of the Worcester Gas Light Company; and at the time of his death had been president of the Worcester Agricultural Society for several years. He was the earliest benefactor of the Worcester Children's Friend Society, and in 1851 gave to it a house and lot of land on Shrewsbury street, which was for a number of years occupied as the Orphans' Home.

<sup>1</sup>"The Auxiliary Bible Society in the County of Worcester" was organized 7 September, 1815, for the sole object of distributing Bibles and Testaments, "in the common English version, without note or comment," among the families in the county which were without them. Its membership was open to persons of all denominations upon the payment of an annual due of one dollar, or a life membership fee of ten dollars; and all settled ministers in the county were entitled to membership ex-officio. The first officers were:—President, Joseph Allen, of Worcester; Vice-President, Rev. Joseph Sumner, of Shrewsbury; Secretary, Rev. Nathaniel Thayer, of Lancaster; Treasurer, Benjamin Heywood, of Worcester; Directors, Rev. Aaron Bancroft, Benjamin Adams, of Uxbridge, Rev. John Fiske, of New Braintree, James Wilson, of Worcester, Rev. <sup>1</sup> Edward Dillingham Bangs, the son of Edward and Hannah Lynde Bangs, studied law with his father, and was admitted to the bar in 1813. For the four succeeding years he was in partnership with his father's old associate, William E. Green, and was also, during a part of this time, the editor of the National Regis. In 1816, 1817, 1820 and 1824 he was a representative in the General Court, and in 1820 was a member of the convention for the revision of the Constitution. In 1824 he succeeded Rejoice Newton, as county attorney, but in the same year was elected secretary of the Commonwealth, and removed to Boston. His love of historical study and his familiarity with the early records of the Commonwealth made him peculiarly fitted for this position, and the years in which he held the office were the happiest of his life; for, although he was a good lawyer, he had never liked his profession. Compelled to resign in 1836, on account of ill health he returned to Worcester, and lived again in his father's old house, which stood opposite the Court House, on the present site of Bangs Block.

Mr. Bangs married, 12 April, 1824, Mary, daughter of Moses Grosvenor, of Worcester.

Died, Worcester, 1 April, 1838.]

22. Storm. Rain all day & night.

23. Violent Storm. Vast numbers of trees blown up by the roots. Eight on the Court house hill and in my yard, most of the fruit trees in my garden wholly destroyed—Fences blown down & broken—Several Chimnies in Worcester blown down, and some houses partly unroofed. 1 barn removed 20 feet. All the fruit blown from trees in all parts of the country and great numbers of the Fruit trees destroyed, and whole acres of forest trees. 80 Squares of glass broken in my buildings.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For several weeks preceding this storm, there had been strong indications of atmospheric disorder, and on the morning before a northeast rain set in, accompanied by a high wind, which increased at nightfall, but then gradually subsided. On the following morning, however, it renewed its violence, blowing from the east with accumulating force until eleven o'clock, when it suddenly shifted to the south-east, and broke into the most disastrous hurricane which has ever visited this part of the country. It lasted for an hour, and made a path about eighty miles in width through southern and central New England. It was severe in parts of New Hampshire, while in Portland, Me., and in Albany N. Y., it merely took the form of a heavy gale; and the city of New York was little affected. The shipping and the seaport towns suffered the greatest damage, especially along the southern coast, and many vessels and some lives were lost. In Providence it was estimated that one hundred and fifty buildings were entirely demolished, including one church and most of the wharves and warehouses on the water front. Women and children were rescued in boats from second-story windows, and the streets were rendered impassable by the debris of buildings, vessels, furniture and merchandise. All the vessels in the harbor, with the exception of two, from five hundred tons down, broke their fasts, and were driven with the rapidity of lightning up the cove, cutting through the town bridge on their way, and were beached, some of them five or six feet above water level. One sloop of sixty tons floated across Weybosset street, and leaned upright against a three-story brick house in Pleasant street, with its mast projecting above the roof. In one place the tide rose seventeen feet above its ordinary level, and at Braintree, Mass., it was held back in the river for two hours, by the force of the wind. The change in the wind so checked the flood of the tide at Boston, that although the shipping and wharves suffered considerably, the town itself escaped with much less damage than those in its immediate vicinity. A few roofs were blown off, and one building—the Glass Works—was destroyed by fire. About twenty of the large trees on the Mall, skirting the Common, and five elms, averaging nearly eight feet in circumference, on "Paddock's Walk," in front of the Granary burying-ground, were uprooted. In Dorchester seventeen houses were unroofed, about forty barns destroyed and over five thousand fruit trees were levelled. In all places to the leeward of salt water the pastures were ruined by salt spray, and all the standing trees and vegetables were blighted as by fire. The damage in Worcester was confined chiefly to the fruit trees and timber. The

24. Went to Chh. twice. Had 4 or 5 men Saturday afternoon and today repairing damages by the Storm. The repair of fences, &c. will cost me at least 500 dollars.

25. Employed with 4 or 5 persons clearing off wrecks made by the Storm on Saturday. Drury went to Grafton.

26. Employed as yesterday. Supreme Court. My son's wife & daughter came from Boston.

27. Frazer came up from Boston. Wretched evening.

28. Rode out. Unwell. Moses Thomas dined with us.

29. My Son came up from Boston. Disagreeable Controversy in the family. Dismissed Wm. Drury jun<sup>r</sup>. my Coachman.

30. More disagreeable controversy. Dismissed Matilda Allen, our Chambermaid. Rode to Holden with my son in a Chaise. Nicholas Johnson came to live with me as Coachman.

October, 1815.

1. Went to Chh. once. Continue untranquilised.

Massachusetts Spy says: "Neither the memory of man, or the annals of the country can furnish any parallel to this storm, and it is estimated that the ordinary consumption of ten years of the whole town will not exhaust the wood which is now prostrate." At its height there was a suffocating current of hot air, as from a bath, and the rain which fell in the vicinity was so impregnated with salt as to make incrustations on the windows. On the morning of the storm flocks of sea gulls were seen in the meadows in Grafton and Worcester, but after the wind had gone down, they took their flight again towards the sea.

Cash received.

2. Attended the tryal at the Supreme Court of the first Parish against the town for the recovery of the parsonage. The action was brought against me I owning the premises, in the name of the late pastor D<sup>r</sup>. Sam. Austin. The cause went against the town by the verdict of the Jury. But the Verdict is of no consequence, as the issue depends on questions of law to be decided by the Court. Attended at the Bank. A new director chosen in my room. I find myself not able to attend longer in this office. Have served 12 years.

Mrs. Andrews arrived from Stafford Springs. Matilda Allen left us. Sub council of the A. A. S. met at my house.

3. Mrs. Andrews went to Boston in the Stage. Attended Supreme Court. The jury on the Action first Parish vs. the town of Worcester, gave a Verdict in favour of only one charge of the parish against the town for 1500 dollars. The parish sued for 11,000 dols. The town review the action.

4. Went to Boston—Miss Sheldon with me in the Coach—and Johnson, a Dane, my new Coachman.

5. Called on Mr. Joseph Steadman, who I found to be the husband of my new housekeeper, and whose name is Frances Steadman, and not Frances Thurston, as she called herself. I could not prevail with him to receive her again.

6. Dined with Mr. E. T. Andrews.

7. Returned to Worcester with Miss Sheldon. Mr. Whipple came from Walpole.

8. None of the family went to Church. Unwell.

9. M<sup>r</sup>. Whipple sat out for Walpole. Nathan Patch returned and began work.

10. Eliot came to work. Informed our housekeeper Mrs. Frances Steadman, alias Thurston, by Mrs. Thomas desire, that she did not wish for her services any longer.

11. Felt better. Anne Sheldon unwell.
12. Getting in Potatoes.
13. Do. Paid and dismissed our housekeeper Mrs. Frances Thurston, whose real name is Steadman, her husband by this last name, being now living in Boston, from whom she separated by agreement. A likely, genteel woman. She returned to Boston in the Stage. Anne L. Sheldon very unwell, has a Dr.
14. Mr. Soper, his sister Rachel, and his little son, came to visit us.
15. Went to Chh. once.
16. They returned to Boston. Two Misses Morris, of Halifax, maiden Ladies, came in the Stage from Boston to visit us.
17. Mrs. Legate of Leominster, and her sister, Miss R. Calef, of Boston, came to visit us.
18. Mrs. Legate and Miss Calef returned to Leominster. This Evening the two Miss Morris, went in the Stage to Stafford.
19. Got in a load of Corn. Spent the Even<sup>g</sup>. with Judge Bangs.
21. Got in Corn from the field. Went in the Coach, with only Johnson as far as Framingham on my way to Boston. Lodged at Eaton's, in Framingham.
22. Went from Framingham to Boston.

<sup>1</sup>The members elected at this meeting were Stephen Sewall of Montreal; George Baxter Upham, Samuel Fiske and Caleb Ellis, of Claremont, N. H.; John Curtis Chamberlain, of Charlestown, N. H.; Benjamin J. Gilbert, of Hanover, N. H. Samuel Elliot, of Washington; Dr. William Bowen, of Providence; Henry A. S.

Artillery Co<sup>y</sup>. waited on the Society and escorted them to the Chapel, where an Address was delivered by D<sup>r</sup>. Paine, and there were other Exercises.<sup>1</sup> I was again chosen President.

Dearborn, Edward St. Loe Livermore and James Cushing Merrill, of Boston; Rev. Thomas Robbins, of East Windsor, Conn.; and Samuel F. B. Morse, of Charlestown Mass.

ORDER OF PERFORMANCES,

AT THE THIRD ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

OF THE

AMERICAN ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY,

ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1815.

- I. "We praise thee, O God"....By a select choir: Organ by Dr. JACKSON.
- II. PRAYER.
- III. HYMN. "Before Jehovah's awful throne." (Denmark.)
- IV. LESSONS.
- V. HYMN. "O Thou, the first, the greatest friend." (Colchester new.)
- VI. ADDRESS....By Dr. WILLIAM PAINE, M. D.
- VII. HYMN. "To Thee! great Sovereign of the skies." (Old Hundred.)
- VIII. BENEDICTION.

BEFORE Jehovah's awful throne,
Ye nations bow, with sacred joy;
Know that the Lord is God alone,
He can create, and he destroy.

His sovereign power, without our aid,
Made us of clay, and form'd us men;
And when like wandering sheep we stray'd,
He brought us to his fold again.

We'll crowd thy gates with thankful songs,
High as the heaven our voices raise;
And earth with her ten thousand tongues,
Shall fill thy courts with sounding praise.

Wide as the world is thy command;
Vast as eternity thy love;
Firm as a rock thy truth shall stand,
When rolling years shall cease to move.

O THOU the first, the greatest friend,
Of all the human race!
Whose strong right hand has ever been
Their stay and dwelling place!

Before the mountains heav'd their heads
Beneath thy forming hand;
Before this pond'rous globe itself
Arose at thy command;

That pow'r which rais'd, and still upholds
This universal frame,
From countless, unbeginning time,
Was ever still the same.

Those mighty periods of years,
Which seem to us so vast,
Appear no more before thy sight
Than yesterday that's past.

To Thee! Great Sov'reign of the skies,
THIS DAY our grateful notes resound;
From ev'ry heart shall incense rise,
And praise throughout our land be found.

New empires never rise by chance,—
No veering gales dominion blow,
A Sov'reign power doth states advance,
And lay oppressive kingdoms low.

Led by that power, th' advent'rous band,
The trackless "waste of waves" explor'd:—
That power upheld the warrior's hand
Which drew for right the conqu'ring sword.

Then high the pealing organ swell,—
From every tongue let praises rise;—
Loud let the choral anthems tell
THY POW'ER, Great Sovereign of the skies!

(After the original broadside in the possession of the society.)

25. Returned to Worcester in the Coach, with only Johnson the Coachman, as far as Framingham,—there took Judge Paine's daughter Sarah<sup>1</sup> to Worcester.

26. Lawrence came to see his wife. He is desirous she should remain in our family this winter, and Mrs. T. wishes it,—his visit appeared to make her deranged.

[Born, Worcester, 29 November, 1794. Died, Worcester, 15 October, 1840.]

1. Gathered the last of the Indian Corn from the field.
2. My brother came from Lancaster—Discovered that Matilda, who lately lived with us, had stolen a number of articles from us, which were found in her possession. Disagreeable controversy with Mrs. T. who is grown very fretful & childish.
3. Matilda appeared, said at first the articles she had stolen were given to her; but afterwards acknowledged the theft. My brother returned to Lancaster.
5. Went to Church twice.
6. Sub Council of the Am. Antiq<sup>n</sup>. Society met at my House. Counsellors were appointed for other States than Massachusetts.<sup>1</sup>
7. Anne L. Sheldon went in a Chaise with Nathan Patch to Smithfield.

9. Matilda Allen, after having confessed her guilt to me denied it to others; I again sent for her and she appeared very penitent and again acknowledged her crime in writing before two witnesses. I forgave her, and gave her good advice, for which she thanked me.

10. The Misses Morris having tarried with us two days returned to Leominster in my carriage.

11. Frazer, alias Lawrence, again returned to our family. She came up in the Stage. Mrs. Thomas had written to her. Her return was unexpected to me.

12. Went to Church in the afternoon.

14. Met the Tanyard C<sup>o</sup>. at the yard.

15. Met the Tanyard Company again at the Tanyard. Moses Thomas dined with us. Dr. Bancroft and his wife spent the Evening.

22. Attended with other Members of the Tanyard company to a settlement of some of its concerns—we supped together at Wheeler's tavern.

23. Met again with the other proprietors of the tanyard, and agreed on a division of the real estate. I agreed to take the dwelling house and the lot of Land belonging to it at 1200 dollars. Mr. Lincoln jun<sup>r</sup>. & Mr. Maccarty take the tanyard and the extensive buildings on it at 2400 dollars. D<sup>r</sup>. Paine takes the Bark Mill at 400 dollars. E. Flagg took leather equivalent.

Nathan Patch, who has been with me three years as a farmer left me by agreement. He is going to reside in the State of Newyork where he has purchased land.—I intend quitting this business.

24. Went to Church in the afternoon.

25. The tanyard Company having divided the real estate Deeds were executed to each other. I took the dwelling house and lot. Maccarty and Lincoln and Myself had 1200 dols. each in real Estate. Dr. Paine 400 dols. and 800 in Leather. Enoch Flagg 1200 in leather as an equivalent. Spent the Evening at Judge Bangs.

27. Miss Lynde & Judge Bangs spent the Evening with us.

29. Judge Bangs and Miss Lynde spent Even<sup>g</sup>. with us.

30. A Stove, purchased by subscription, put up in the Church of the north parish—the first ever used in a Church in Worcester. Stove and funnels cost about 85 dollars.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> There was great opposition to the introduction of stoves into churches, partly no doubt, on account of the danger from fire, but principally because the old puritanical feeling still lingered in the minds of the majority of the people, that such comforts were inconsistent with the proper spirit for religious worship. Foot-stoves of perforated oak or tin, having iron pans to hold the coals, were used by the women, and it was a common sight to see boys or servants carrying them to the meeting-house. The first stove known to have been placed in a New England church, was in Hadley, in 1734. In 1783, the Old South Church, in Boston, had one, and there was one in Longmeadow, in 1810, and in Salem, in 1815. The churches had been built without thought of such luxuries, and when they began to be introduced, the buildings had to be adapted to the purpose as well as might be. They were large and clumsy, and usually stood in the middle of the aisle, while the pipes projected through the nearest window. This caused great discomfort from the dropping of soot and oil, and tin pails were sometimes hung from them to catch the drippings.

At the annual meeting of the Second Parish, 18 March, 1811, consent was given to have a stove placed in the meeting-house, provided that it should be done without any expense to the parish, and without discommoding the owners of pews; and Nathan Heard, Levi Lincoln, Jr., and Enoch Flagg were appointed a committee to examine a suitable position for it.

Nothing seems to have been done at the time however, as there is no entry in the parish records in regard to it, until the meeting 25 November, 1816, when it was voted that the assessors should provide fuel, and have suitable fires made, and that the parish should pay the rent of the pew in which the stove stood.

8. Spent the Evening with Mrs. Thomas at Mr. Macarty's. Unwell in the night. Had Cholic and asthma.

<sup>1</sup>In October, 1814, Dr. William Paine, Samuel J. Prescott, Benjamin Russell, Rev. William Bentley and Edward Bangs had been appointed a committee of ways and means, to take into consideration the financial condition of the society, and to devise some plan for its support and for the erection of a building. In the existing state of public opinion the idea of a lottery was the most natural suggestion to present itself. This means of increasing the funds of churches, colleges and public institutions was not only duly authorized by law, but was held to be unobjectionable. The prevalence of the lottery system can be attributed to two sources: the craze for speculation which swept over the country at the close of the eighteenth century, when money began to circulate more freely, and the demand for internal improvements which arose at the same period. No public building, road or bridge could be built without their aid. The newspapers of the day were filled with such alluring offers, headed by the figure of Fortune pouring streams of gold from a well-filled Cornucopia, or by lottery wheels turning out marvellous prizes, that the temptation was too strong to be resisted. Men risked their all in a wild scramble for wealth, which at last threatened so disastrous results to the financial condition of the country, that in 1833 lotteries were forbidden by law in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New York.

At the meeting of the Sub-Council, 6 June, 1815, Judge Bangs was appointed to draft a subscription paper for a lottery, to be presented to the members for their signatures; but he reported at the next meeting, that he found, upon investigation, that such a lottery would be illegal without a grant from the General Court.

15 August, the Committee of Ways and Means notified Mr. Thomas that:—

“They are fully convinced, that adequate Funds for the support of the institution, cannot at this Time be obtained, by Subscription.

“They therefore beg leave, to recommend to the Society, to apply to the Government of the United States, for a Lottery, or any other legislative aid, that they may see fit to grant us, and that a Committee be appointed, to prepare, and present, a Petition to Congress, early in the next Session, for that purpose.”

At the annual meeting, in October, this report was recommitted to the same committee, with instructions to prepare and present to Congress and the General Court, a petition asking “for such grants of lands or assistance to the Society as the Committee may think best.”

9. Not having much sleep last night went to bed this Evening at 9 o'clock. Frazer unwell.

10. Moses Thomas & Son dined with me.

14. Went to Chh. in the afternoon.

The Chances, not the Tickets will be numbered for drawing, and all the Numbers will be put into the wheel before the drawing commences.

Every Chance will be entitled to the whole of the prize drawn against the number.

A Ticket of the price of 25 Cents has one Chance and may draw the highest or one of the other prizes.

Every Ticket, the price of which exceeds 25 cents, will have as many chances as there are quarters of a dollar in the price of the ticket: i. e. A ticket of the price of one dollar will have four Chances—a ticket of the price of five dollars will have twenty Chances—and so on.—

The numbering of the Chances will begin on the Ticket of the highest price, viz. that of 4000 dollars, and will embrace 16000 numbers or chances, beginning with No. 1., and ending with No. 16000.—The numbering will be continued on the ticket bearing the next highest prize, viz. that of 3000 dollars; the numbers on this ticket will begin with No. 16001, and end with No. 28,000; and in this manner will the numbering of the chances be continued through the whole of the tickets.

15 Judge Bangs & Miss Lynde spent the Evening with us.

16. Attended the annual meeting of the Morning Star lodge this Evening by request of the Lodge and installed the new master. Mrs. Thomas unwell.

18. Warm South wind, which carried off the Snow remarkably fast, and caused a great rise of water. Some mill damns carried away—the brook rose more than a foot over the tanyard—wet much leather in the Warehouse, and caused 8 hogsheds of lime to burst.

21. Went to Church twice.

22. Spent the Evening with Mrs. T. at Judge Bangs's.

25. Miss Lynde & Judge Bangs visit and Dr. Bancroft.

28. Went to Church twice.

As no Blanks will be put into the Wheels, every number which is drawn must be a prize—therefore as the highest priced tickets have a number of Chances proportionable to their prizes, they may each in that proportion draw several or even all of the prizes.

This scheme is calculated for a Lottery the Tickets for which will amount to 110,000 dollars. Four Chances to a dollar—60,000 dollars to be drawn in prizes—30,000 for the benefit of the Institution,—and 10,000 allowed for managing the Lottery—expenses attending the selling and drawing—Losses, etc.

ONE CLASS ONLY IS PROPOSED.

The Possessors of the highest priced Tickets may divide and sub-divide them at pleasure, and part with any number of the Chances which they contain designating their numbers."

Early in January, 1816, the plan of the Lottery was decided upon. Levi Lincoln Jr., assisted by Mr. Thomas, supported the petition, which after a long debate was refused a third reading in the House, the vote standing 58 to 53. A motion to reconsider the vote, and to refer the subject to the next session, was then passed by a vote of 75 to 21. Francis Blake was added to the committee, which immediately renewed its efforts to secure passage of the bill; but on its presentation, in June, it was recommitted.

In May, 1821, the project was again revived by the Sub-Council, which appointed Mr. Lincoln and Edward D. Bangs to take the necessary steps towards obtaining a grant for a "Literary Lottery," and to report at the semi-annual meeting, in June. The records of the society, however, do not show that such a report was submitted, or that any further action was taken.

<sup>1</sup>Samuel Putnam, the son of Gideon and Hannah Browne Putnam of Danvers, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1787, studied law with Theophilus Parsons, and settled in Salem in 1790. He was senator from Essex in 1808, 1809, 1813 and 1814, and a member of the House in 1812. When, in 1814, Judge Isaac Parker was made chief justice, on the death of Chief Justice Sewall, he was appointed to fill the vacancy thus made on the Supreme Bench, and retained the position until his resignation in 1842. He received the degree of LL. D. from Harvard, in 1825. Judge Putnam married, 28 October, 1795, Sarah, daughter of John and Lois Pickering Gool.

<sup>1</sup>Perez Morton, a native of Plymouth, Mass., removed to Boston in 1760, with his father, Joseph Morton, who was for many years the keeper of the White Horse Tavern, on Newbury (Washington) street. He entered the Boston Latin School, and was graduated from Harvard in 1771. He then studied law, but after his admission to the bar in July, 1774, the outbreak of the Revolution, in which he took an active part, prevented him from practising at that time. In 1775 he was Deputy Secretary of State and a member of the Committee of Safety. In the following year he was brought into notice by his funeral oration, delivered in King's Chapel, over the remains of General Joseph Warren, which had been found on the heights of Charlestown after the evacuation of Boston by the British, and were buried with military honors in the Granary burying ground. In 1777 he was lieutenant in General Sullivan's expedition to Rhode Island. At the close of the war he opened an office in his house on State street, where the Union Bank now stands, and became prominent in political and professional life. He was speaker of the House of Representatives from 1806 to 1811; a member of the convention for the revision of the state constitution in 1820; and attorney-general of Massachusetts from 1810 to 1832. He was a strong democrat in his views, and was the leader of the Constitutional Society, otherwise known as the Jacobin Club, formed by the enthusiastic friends of the French Revolution in 1792, which held its meetings at the Green Dragon Tavern.

Mr. Morton married, in 1778, Sarah Wentworth Apthorp of Quincy.

[Born, Plymouth, 13 November, 1751. Died, Dorchester, 14 October, 1837.]

18. Finished painting N<sup>o</sup>. front room & painted South Entry room. White-washed Kitchen overhead. Very cold. Hard frost. Some Snow.

Bounds of the land between me and Mrs. Duncan whose land is now occupied by Dr. Fiske.

I own and claim three feet south of my 3 story house—Several disputes have arisen between Mrs. Duncan and myself relative to this bound.—D<sup>r</sup>. Fiske some years since removed the Cellar Wall of my house, and I rebuilt it with Brick, to please him as the rough Wall was not so agreeable to him; and I have this day consented to set the fence between him and me, farther to the north than it should be, but I do not give up my claim to the Land South—I shall be more particular in some other place than what is here written.

<sup>1</sup>John Brooks, the son of Caleb and Ruth Albree Brooks, was apprenticed at the age of fourteen, to Dr. Simon Tufts, of Medford, Mass., where he was a fellow student of Benjamin Thompson, afterwards Count Rumford, with whom he formed an intimate friendship, which lasted until the latter's death. He began to practise in Reading, Mass., but the preliminary movements of the Revolution occupied the greater part of his time, and 19 April, 1775, he marched to Lexington at the head of a company which had been trained by himself. Immediately he received a major's commission; was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the eighth Massachusetts regiment, in 1777; was promoted to the rank of colonel in 1778; and acted as adjutant-general at the battle of Monmouth. After the army was disbanded he resumed his professional duties in Medford, but did not retire from public life. He was a member of the state convention for the ratification of the federal constitution in 1788; and served successively as a representative to the General Court, as a member of the State Senate and of the Council. In 1795 he was appointed by Washington, United States Marshal and Inspector of the Revenues. He was for many years a major general of militia for his county, and from 1812 to 1815, was Adjutant General of Massachusetts. In 1816 he was elected Governor of Massachusetts, and held that office for seven consecutive terms, until, in 1823, he declined to be again a candidate.

Governor Brooks was an overseer of Harvard from 1815 to 1818, and received from it the degree of A. M., in 1787, and of LL. D. in 1817. He was also the president of the Massachusetts Medical Society from 1817, to the time of his death; of the Society of the Cincinnati from 1787; and of the Massachusetts Bible Society.

He married in 1774, Lucy Smith of Reading.

Blake, in Worcester, and was admitted to the bar as an attorney, in 1815. He settled in Spencer, but in May, 1816, again became associated with Mr. Blake, and when the latter became Clerk of the Courts, a few months later, he succeeded to the practice of the office. His early success at the bar is shown by the fact that, in the first ten years of his professional life, he not only retained Mr. Blake's large clientage, but materially increased it; and when Governor Lincoln was appointed to the Supreme Bench, in 1825, he was the acknowledged leader of the county bar, and had few superiors as an advocate in Massachusetts. He was in partnership with Governor Lincoln in 1824 and 1825; with Charles Allen from 1825 to 1831; and with Emory Washburn from that time, until his retirement from active practice, in 1834.

Governor Davis's reputation, however, rests rather on his qualities as a statesman, than as a lawyer. His political life began with his candidacy for Congress from the Worcester South District, on the Adams ticket, in 1824. Unknown in politics, four trials were necessary to secure his election, but he was returned for the three succeeding terms with practically no opposition. When he entered Congress, the question of protection to American industries, which had been attracting much attention, was just beginning to assume a decided character. His warm support of its principles soon brought him into prominence, and it was in a great measure due to his efforts, that the system was finally perfected. His speech in reply to Mr. McDuffie of South Carolina, the leader of the opposition, in 1832, was regarded as the most powerful argument in its favor; and his answer to Mr. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, on the same subject, in the Senate, in 1840, was said to have had more influence among the masses, than any document which was issued in the exciting presidential campaign of that year.

In 1833, the Antimasonic party, then at the height of its power in the state, nominated John Quincy Adams for Governor. Governor Lincoln declined to allow his name to be used again, and Governor Davis reluctantly consented to accept the nomination by the Whig convention. The contest was so close that in the popular election there was no choice, but in the General Court, Governor Davis received a majority. He was re-elected, but resigned in March, 1835, to accept a seat in the United States Senate, where he remained until January, 1841. Before the close of his term, however, in November, 1840, he was again brought forward for governor, on the Whig ticket, as the most formidable opponent to the growing power of the Democratic party, which had carried the state in 1839, electing its candidate, Marcus Morton, by a majority of one out of over one hundred and two thousand votes cast. Governor Davis received a majority of fifteen thousand over Morton, which the Democratic gains reduced in 1841 to less than five hundred; and in 1842, as in 1833, there was no popular choice. After a protracted struggle in the General Court, in consequence, doubtless, of Governor Davis's prudent neutrality in the case of the so-called "Dorr Rebellion," in Rhode Island, Morton for a second time secured his election by one vote.

After two years spent in retirement, he was chosen, in 1845, to fill out the unexpired term of Isaac C. Bates in the Senate; and in 1847 was returned for the full senatorial term, ending in March, 1853, after which he declined a re-election.

During his service in Congress, which covered a period of twenty-two years, Governor Davis always acted in strict accordance with northern principles. He opposed the administrations of Jackson and Van Buren; the Clay compromise tariff bill of 1833; the sub-treasury plan of 1840; the Mexican war; the admission of slavery into the newly acquired territories; and the compromise acts of 1850; and was one of the most decided supporters of the Wilmot proviso. For many years he was chairman of the Committee of Commerce, in the Senate, and devoted much of his attention to international relations and finance. His straightforward methods and candid manner won for him the fullest confidence, not only of his constituents, but of the whole country, and he was popularly known as "Honest John Davis."

He was a councillor of the American Antiquarian Society from 1824 to 1831; and its vice-president from 1831 to 1853, when he succeeded Edward Everett as president. He was also president of the Worcester Agricultural Society, in 1831; of the Worcester Lyceum, in 1834; and the first president of both the State Mutual Life Assurance Company, and of the Worcester and Nashua Railroad.

Governor Davis married, 28 March, 1822, Eliza, daughter of Aaron and Lucretia Chandler Bancroft.

<sup>1</sup>Ebenezer Smith Thomas, the son of Joshua and Mary Twing Thomas, was apprenticed to his uncle to learn the printer's trade, in 1788, but four years later he left Worcester, and was employed for a time as a bookbinder in Boston. In 1795 he went to Charleston, S. C., where for the next twelve years he had a large bookstore and bindery. While on a visit to New England, in 1804, he formed a partnership with Nathaniel G. and Christopher Olney, Jr., and built in Providence the fifth cotton factory in the United States. Intending to settle in Providence, he closed his business in Charleston in the spring of 1807, but in the following summer he was persuaded to dispose of his interest in the cotton mill and to remove to Baltimore. He purchased and began to improve a large farm there, but the embargo so reduced the price of its products, that he was compelled to relinquish it in November, 1809. From 1810 to 1816 he edited the Charleston City Gazette when he again settled in Baltimore. In 1818 and 1819 he was a member of the Maryland Legislature. From 1829 to his death, he lived in Cincinnati, where he was the editor of the Commercial Daily Advertiser from 1829 to 1835 and of the Daily Evening Post from 1835 to 1839.

Mr. Thomas made several visits to Europe and published in 1840 the "Reminiscences of Sixty Five Years." in two volumes, a journal of his life at home and abroad.

<sup>1</sup>Charles Augustus Goodrich, the son of Rev. Samuel Goodrich, of Berlin, Conn., was graduated from Yale in 1812, and after he was licensed, in 1815, preached for a few months in Congress Hall, at Saratoga Springs. 15 July, 1816, he was settled as the colleague of Dr. Samuel Austin, the minister of the Old South Church, who had accepted the presidency of the University of Vermont, and became the sole minister on the latter's formal dismission, in 1818. His settlement was opposed by but one person, Daniel Waldo, who was not himself a member of the church, though some of his family were; but after his ordination, 9 October, 1816, personal objections to his doctrines, and to the government of the church, caused the opposition to spread so widely, that it grew into the most bitter quarrel which has ever occurred in any church in Worcester. After all attempts at reconciliation had failed an ecclesiastical council was resorted to, which resulted in the acquittal of Mr. Goodrich on all the charges brought against him. The disaffected withdrew, and formed, with others the Calvinist or Central Church. Two years later, ill health compelled Mr. Goodrich to ask for his dismissal, which was granted 14 November, 1820. He then returned to Berlin and devoted himself to literary pursuits. He was the author of numerous works on American history, and was for many years associated with his brother, Samuel G. Goodrich, (Peter Parley) in the compilation of historical and geographical text books. In 1848 he removed to Hartford, Conn., where he held a pastorate, and was at one time a member of the State Senate.

30. Frazer and my Grand daughter Frances went to Sterling in the carriage & returned.

I received a very polite and friendly Letter from a Committee of the Philadelphia Typographical Society, appointed for that Society, inclosing a Vote of the Society, informing me that I was unanimously elected an honorary member, etc. Also, a Certificate of my Election, elegantly engraved, and enclosed in a splendid frame.

31. Phebe Franklin went to Mendon—Maria Webb an assistant in the family.

Begun to finish the Road, on the hill, north of the Court house, for the County, which was begun by the town.

This summer the weather has been the most extraordinary that I can remember. A frost every month since last autumn. But few warm days, this summer. No month but what in several days of it a fire has been very agreeable. The nights generally very cool. Three times Frost in August, which in many places cut off the Indian Corn and Potatoes. The season has been remarkably dry, in the United States generally, and in many parts of Europe—as has the cold also—Crops of Hay very Short. But the Crops of English grain have been very good. Several times frost in Sept<sup>r</sup>. as well as in all the months of summer.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The year 1816 has always been known as the year in which there was no summer. The preceding winter had been severe, but April opened with warm sunny weather, which gave every promise of an early spring. In the latter part of the month, however, severe snow squalls, followed by ice, destroyed the buds on the trees. A cold and frosty season set in, which continued, with the exception of three weeks of warm weather in September and October, through the summer and autumn.

September, 1816.

1. Went to Church twice.
2. Geer began working on the Hill.
3. K. Noah began to paint the mansion house—I think it is now Eight years since it was last painted. Rebecca Thomas from Lancaster came on a visit.

7. K. Noah worked at painting 5 days. Rice 4 days. Geer worked 6 days on the hill his son 3 days.
8. Went to Church once. My seeing eye much inflamed.
9. Geer one day—his son half a day—Knower 1 day—Rice  $\frac{1}{2}$  day. Began a Vault, 9 feet square, including the Stoning, for the Kitchen Sink. My Nephew's daughter Rebecca returned to Sterling.
11. Geer 2 days, his son 2 days. Cold. Surtouts and fires made use of. Finished the Vault for the Sink of the Almost all vegetation was destroyed, not only in this country, but in Europe. The fruit and vegetables were killed and even the grass was so withered that the grazing cattle could hardly eat it. Observations taken at the time, in Philadelphia, show that in June, from six to ten inches of snow fell in Vermont, and three inches in the interior of New York. Ice formed in every month, and 5 July, it was as thick as window glass in Pennsylvania, New York and New England.

19. Finished making the small piece of Road north of the Court house—it was chiefly rock—it has cost the town about 100 dollars including the Damages (Benefit) given to Mr. Salisbury, and the County 152 dollars including 12 dollars damage allowed Whittemore.

Began digging a well at the foot of the hill, South, on the 2<sup>d</sup> Street, or rather at the junction of three Streets, for the benefit of the neighbors (and at their expense) in case of fire.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>At this time a middle road extended along a portion of Court Hill, the southerly end of which, as shown in a woodcut in the History of Worcester County, published in 1830, entered Main street nearly in front of Mr. Thomas's house. A little to the north, between his house and the Court House, steps led from this road to the top of the hill, along the edge of which was a row of stone posts, connected by an iron chain. Both slopes were banked by a stone wall.

In March, 1832, the Court of Sessions, on the petition of Nathan Heard, Rejoice Newton, Samuel B. Thomas, John W. Lincoln and Isaac Davis, representing the citizens of Worcester, ordered that this road be discontinued. Main street was widened by cutting down the lower part of the hill, and the two walls were replaced by one of rough field stone.

Barber absent—he had 3 hands to work—Knower did not work.

2. My granddaughter Frances returned to Boston. She has been with me three months. James Williams went to Vermont and Canada.

3. Workmen finished the well in the Street at the foot of the hill close to the upper Wall.

5. Knower worked at painting every day this week. Heard from Kentucky that the Skeleton, or "Mummy" so-called, was sent to the Am. An. So<sup>y</sup>. but Nahum Ward<sup>1</sup> by whom it was sent, kept it and exhibited it thro' the States.<sup>2</sup>

6. Went to Church twice.

<sup>1</sup> Nahum Ward, the son of Thomas Walter and Elizabeth Denny Ward, of Shrewsbury, Mass., was a merchant in Shrewsbury, and also served for some years as a deputy sheriff under his father. In 1811, having negotiated for some lands in the "Ohio Co. Purchase," he removed to Marietta, Ohio, and opened an office as a land broker. He acquired a fortune in developing the country, and became a large holder of real estate. He was at one time mayor of Marietta.

Mr. Ward married 3 December, 1817, Sarah Catharine, daughter of William Skinner, of Marietta, who died in 1844; and in 1849 he married his cousin, Harriet, daughter of Daniel and Nancy Watson Denny, of Leicester, Mass.

[Born, Shrewsbury, Mass., 23 October, 1785. Died, Marietta, Ohio, 6 April, 1860.]

Frequent rumors of its expected arrival called forth numerous amusing squibs and poems in the local papers; and there is a tradition that when it finally reached Worcester, in the spring of 1817, the church bells were tolled an indefinite number of times for the age of the deceased.

It remained in the society's possession until 1876, when it was placed in the government's exhibit of mummies at the Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, and was afterwards, at the request of the Smithsonian Institution, added to that collection.

9. Finished repairing the South End of Court hill.
10. Knower began painting again.

Great Fires in the Woods in the district of Maine and in Newhampshire have filled the Atmosphere with smoke for several days.

12. Rode to Millbury. Judge Bangs went with me.

TO BE SEEN AT COL. SIKES'S HALL,

A FEMALE MUMMY,

SUPPOSED to be more than 1000 years old. She was recently discovered in a Saltpetre Cave, in Kentucky. At the time, she was shrouded in cloth made from the bark of the willow, and ornamented with beads and feathers, having her instruments for working and music lying by her; as was also a very curious wooden bowl, containing burnt bones, the relics of some of her friends, and the preserved skin of a Rattle Snake—all of which are preserved, and now presented to the view of the curious. She appears to have been about 5 feet 8 inches in height, and of the most delicate and elegant symmetry. The hair is still on her head; some of her teeth yet remain, and the nails of her fingers and toes are still perfect.

It is presumed that she, together with the articles found with her, is one of the greatest curiosities ever exhibited to the American world. Great conjectures are formed as to the period of her existence; but we presume it is no exaggeration to say, that in all probability she is as ancient as the immense Mounds of the western Country, which have so much astonished the philosophical world.

<sup>2</sup>In October, 1754, the Board of Overseers, dissatisfied with the standard in elocution and the classics in the college, appointed a committee "to project some new method to promote oratory." Acting upon the report of this committee, in June, 1755, it was voted that instead of the usual declamations in the Chapel, the President "should select some ingenious dialogue, either from Erasmus's Colloquies, or from some other polite Latin author, and that he should appoint as many students as there are persons in such dialogue, each to personate a particular character, and to translate his part into polite English, and prepare himself to deliver it in the Chapel in an oratorical manner." The records of the Overseers state that in the following April six students pronounced before them an English dialogue translated from Castalio; whereupon "the board unanimously expressed their acceptance and approbation" and voted "that the several students aforesaid be sent for and acquainted, that the board are well pleased with their performance, and desire them to proceed as they have begun, that they may not only render themselves ornaments

ORDER OF PERFORMANCES.

AT THE FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE AMERICAN ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.

AT THE STONE CHAPEL, ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1816.

- |                             |                                     |

| II. Prayer.                 | V. Hymn.                            |
| III. Hymn.                  | VI. Benediction.                    |

HYMN I.

LET children hear the mighty deeds,
Which God perform'd of old;
Which in our younger years we saw,
And which our fathers told.

He bids us make his glories known,
His works of power and grace;
And we'll convey His wonders down
Through every rising race.

Our lips shall tell them to our sons,
And they again to theirs;
That generations yet unborn,
May teach them to their heirs.

Thus shall they learn in God alone
Their hope securely stands;
That they may ne'er forget his works,
But practice his commands.

HYMN II

GOD of Eternity! from Thee
Did infant Time its being draw:
Moments and days, and months and years
Revolve by thy unvaried law.

Silent and slow they glide away;—
Steady and strong the current flows;
'Till lost in that unmeasur'd sea
From which its being first arose.

The thoughtless sons of Adam's race
Upon the rapid stream are borne,
To that unseen, eternal home,
From which no travellers return.

Great Source of Wisdom! teach our hearts
To know the price of every hour;
That Time may bear us on to joys,
Beyond its measure and its power.

DOORS OPEN AT 3 O'CLOCK FOR THE ADMITTANCE OF LADIES.

to the College and an honor to their country, but may also excite an emulation in others to excel in eloquence and oratorical attainments, and, in like manner, to merit the approbation of their board.” Two years later these exhibitions were held quarterly; and in May, 1760, they were again changed so that twice in each year, in the spring and fall, each class recited publicly in the college hall or chapel, in their various studies; and once every half year the two senior classes gave a public exhibition of their progress in philosophical and mathematical learning, under the direction of the professor of mathematics. This was the origin of the quarterly exhibitions. The purpose of the overseers was not fully effected, however, until July, 1766, when a law was formally enacted, that twice in every year, at the semi-annual visitation of the committee of the overseers, some of the scholars should “publicly exhibit specimens of their proficiency by pronouncing orations and delivering dialogues, either in English or one of the learned languages, or hearing a forensic disputation, or such other exercises as the President and Tutors shall direct.”

After being held for over a century, these exhibitions were given up in the winter of 1869-70, during the first year of President Eliot’s administration, on the ground that they were no longer a stimulus or reward to the students, and that the community took no interest in them.

<sup>1</sup>Joseph Allen, the son of Phineas and Ruth Smith Allen, of Medfield, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1811, and studied for the ministry under the direction of Rev. Henry Ware, in Cambridge. He was ordained over the church in Northborough, Mass., as minister of the town, 30 October, 1816, and held this pastorate for over forty years, when at his own request a colleague was settled, and he relinquished the active duties of the parish. He received the degree of D. D. from Harvard, in 1848.

Dr. Allen married, 3 February, 1818, Lucy Clarke, daughter of Rev. Henry and Mary Clarke Ware, of Cambridge.

17. Went to Church twice. Rev. Mr. Capron of Sterling preached. My son and his daughter returned to Boston.—A Stranger knocked at my door this Evening—it was dark—I went to the door without a light—he gave me a Letter, signed “F. Deseure” he wished privacy and Charity—he declined entering the house. I went into my room, read his letter written by himself—I returned to the door quickly and without a light, gave him only a dollar—he expressed with much feeling his gratitude—observed he never begged before, and that I might perhaps hear from him again. I regretted much after he was gone, and on reflection that I had not been more benevolent.—He said he came from the Isle of France, arrived at Cape Cod, and was bound to Albany.

23. Received a Letter, and some Books, a present from Professor Ebeling<sup>1</sup> of Hamburg. One of the Books is Schedeli’s Chroion—very ancient and curious,—printed at Nuremberg 1493, filled with cuts. folio.

24. Went to Chh. twice.

1. American Antiq<sup>n</sup>. Society met in Boston by adjournment. New meeting house in Lancaster dedicated. Worcester Social Library Co<sup>y</sup>. annual meeting. I was reelected a Director. Finished settling my concerns with M<sup>r</sup>. Anson Whipple—he sat out for Walpole N. H. this evening.

2. Mrs. Thomas returned from Lancaster with my brother's wife. Mr. Jennison<sup>1</sup>, Librarian of the Am. Antiq<sup>n</sup>. Society, began making a Catalogue.

<sup>1</sup>Samuel Jennison, the son of Samuel and Sally Fiske Jennison, of Brookfield, Mass., came to Worcester in 1800, at the age of twelve, to live with his uncle, Dr. Oliver Fiske, in whose store he was employed. In 1810 he was appointed the accountant of the Worcester Bank, then the only banking institution between Boston and Pittsfield. Two years later he became its cashier, and held this position until his resignation, in 1846. He was also the treasurer of the Worcester County Institution for Savings from its organization, in 1828, to 1853; treasurer of the town in 1829; and town clerk from 1833 to 1836.

Mr. Jennison was a man of scholarly tastes and a devoted student of English literature. He was a ready writer, and for more than fifty years was a frequent contributor, usually under an anonymous name, both in prose and verse, to the newspapers and magazines. He early began the compilation of a dictionary of American biography, which was nearly completed, when, on learning that Dr. William Allen was revising his earlier work on the same subject, he transferred a large number of his notes to him. The remainder of the collection, which contains much valuable material is now in the possession of the American Antiquarian Society.

He was the first librarian of the American Antiquarian Society, serving from 1814 to 1825; corresponding secretary from 1823 to 1826; treasurer from 1829 to 1843; and from 1846 to 1860; and a councillor from 1820 to 1823.

neighborhood, two of which were consumed. This Thunder Storm extended as far as Philadelphia—where it was also severe—it was succeeded by Snow—then rain, and suddenly arrested by hard frost which froze the water in the gutters, and on the pavements while running into the Sewers. This was the second thunder storm in Philadelphia since January commenced.

I find by the settlement made by my agents with M<sup>r</sup>. A. Whipple, whom I sat up in business in that place, and took into partnership, that I shall suffer an actual loss of 12,250 dollars—he presented a deceptive account of Stock. I do not know that I can have any remedy.

19. Wind W. & N. W. blew almost to a Hurricane through the last night and all this day. One of the windows in the Cupola of the Court house was blown in and broken, as were several Squares of glass in other parts of the Cupola. The wind has been exceedingly high for 3 days. and after his admission to the bar, in 1798, settled in Leominster. He was twice elected to the General Court from Leominster; represented the Worcester north district in Congress from 1811 to 1815; and was Clerk of the Courts for Worcester County from 1817 to 1833, when he resumed the practice of his profession in Worcester. On his removal to Worcester in 1817, he lived in the house formerly occupied by Rev. Samuel Austin, on Main street; then for a short time in the Gardiner Chandler house; and finally bought the estate at the westerly corner of Front and Spring streets, which was afterwards the first City Hospital.

Mr. Bigelow married, 8 April, 1804, Hannah, daughter of Rev. Francis and Sarah Gibson Dana, of Leominster.

[Born, Westminster, 5 December, 1775.

Died, Worcester, 5 April, 1860.]

8. Decision of the Supreme Court declared in the action brought by the first Parish to recover what is now called the parsonage, which I purchased of the H<sup>irs</sup> of the late Rev. M<sup>r</sup>. Maccarty. The parish recovered—I must of course be a considerable loser.<sup>1</sup>

10. Moses Thomas visit.

<sup>1</sup>This estate, which stood at the corner of the present Park and Portland streets, was purchased by the town of Worcester in 1747, for a parsonage; and in the same year, when Rev. Thaddeus Maccarty was ordained as minister of the town, he entered into possession of the premises. In 1765 the town conveyed the estate to him in fee, upon his releasing the town from all charges and expenses for its maintenance. Dr. Maccarty died in 1784, and in 1789 his executors, acting under a power of sale in his will, conveyed the estate to Mr. Thomas. It was held that, as the original grant to the town was for pious and charitable uses, and for the ministers of the town, it was inalienable, and the deed of 1765 was void. Abijah Bigelow and Samuel M. Burnside were counsel for the parish, and Levi Lincoln, Jr., for Mr. Thomas.

was graduated from Williams, in 1798. After his admission to the bar, he practised successively in Royalston, Athol and Westminster, and finally settled in Leominster. He was a member of the General Court in 1812 and 1813; represented the Worcester North District in Congress from 1815 to 1819; and was in the Massachusetts Senate in 1843 and 1844. In 1818 he was appointed a justice of the Circuit Court of Common Pleas for the western district of Massachusetts, and from 1821 to 1842 was a justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

Judge Strong married, 20 November, 1803, Sally, daughter of Joseph and Persis

five inches beyond the walls. Upon the door is the inscription, "Isaiah Thomas. Built 1817."

The roof of the interior is arched and the walls are lined with brick. Three sides of the floor, which is about two and one half feet below the threshold, are occupied by brick receptacles for coffins, one on each side and one at the rear, each covered with a slate stone slab, inscribed with an epitaph. On that of Mr. Thomas, at the left of the door, is the inscription:—

"ISAAH THOMAS, ESQ., LLD.

Author of the History of Printing; founder and first president of the American Antiquarian Society.

Ardently attached to the independence of his country, his early efforts were identified with its cause, and through life his press contributed largely to the policy and the literature of his age.

Born Jan'y 31, 1749—Died April 4, 1831

Aged 82 years."

That on the opposite side contains the remains of Mrs. Thomas; and the third, those of Mrs. Eliza T. Knox. In the rear are also two upright tablets which formerly stood in Mr. Thomas's lot on Mechanic street; one, quite elaborately carved, is in memory of Mrs. Thomas's mother, Mrs. Rebecca Fowle; and the other to Mr. Thomas's mother, Mrs. Fidelity Blackman.

<sup>1</sup>Charles Jackson the son of Jonathan Jackson, of Newburyport, Mass., was graduated from Harvard, in 1793, studied law with Theophilus Parsons, and was admitted to the Essex County Bar in 1796. In 1803 he entered into partnership with Judge Hubbard, in Boston. Ten years later he was appointed an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, and retained his seat upon the bench until 1824. He was a member of the convention for the revision of the state constitution in 1820; was chairman of the commission to codify the laws, in 1833; and was influential in bringing about important legislative reforms.

Judge Jackson was a member of the Board of Overseers of Harvard from 1816 to 1825, and a Fellow from 1825 to 1834. He received the degree of A. M. from that university in course, and that of LL. D. in 1821.

struggling parish, to one of nearly five hundred members. During the first year of his life in Worcester, in addition to his pastoral duties, he was a master in the Latin Grammar School. He was an untiring worker, not only for the betterment of the schools of the town, but for a higher standard of education in general. A man far in advance of the majority of the brethren of his denomination in scholarship and attainments, he recognized the need of a better educated clergy, and for the furtherance of that object, he took an active part in the establishment of the Newton Theological Seminary, Amherst College and Worcester Academy.

In 1831 he made a journey to the west, partly for his health, but mainly to learn the religious condition of the people of the Mississippi Valley. He returned in December, so impressed with the needs of that country, that he asked for dismissal from his pastorate, to enable him to engage more directly in the work of home missions; and upon the organization of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, in 1832, he became its corresponding secretary, with his headquarters in Brooklyn, N. Y. In 1836, he was elected president and professor of theology of Granville College, Ohio, which he had assisted in founding, and retained this position until his death.

He received the degree of A. M. from the University of Vermont, in 1812; and that of D.D. from Waterville College, Maine, in 1832. He was a trustee of Brown University from 1825 to 1844.

Dr. Going married in August, 1811, Lucy Thorndike, of Dunstable, Mass.
 [Born, Reading, Vt., 7 March, 1786. Died, Granville, O., 9 November, 1844.]

6. Went to Chh. twice. Mr. Clarke<sup>1</sup> preceptor, Leicester, preached and dined with me.

7. Attended Parish Meeting & Fire Society.

9. Rode to the Bridge. Judge Bangs went with me. Phebe Franklin our Cook paid and went to live with M<sup>r</sup>. Burnside.

12. Mrs. Frazer, alias Lawrence, left our employment as housekeeper, and goes to Boston to live with her husband. This woman's marriage with my coachman nearly 2 years ago, has terminated greatly to her disadvantage, and I fear her ruin. Mrs. Thomas and my grand daughter Mary Rebecca, went in the Coach this afternoon to Sterling.

13. Mrs. Thomas went to Chh. in Sterling; returned in the afternoon leaving my grand daughter there. Went to Church twice. Mr. Walker, a young candidate preached.

14. M<sup>r</sup>. & Mrs. Nash visited us.

15. Post rider brought a Girl from Royalston to live with us. Her name Hannah Kingsley.

17. Begun to amend and copy my Will.

19. My grand daughter Mary returned from Sterling, with George and Rebecca Thomas. Judge Bangs and Miss Lynde spent last Evening with us.

20. Went to Church twice. Mr. Walker preached.

Lincoln, Major Samuel Graves, Capt. John Mower and Capt. George Moore. The oration was delivered by Pliny Merrick, in the South Meeting House, and an ode by Edward D. Bangs, was sung by Capt. Sewall Hamilton. The dinner was served in a bower on the hill opposite the Central Hotel. Mr. Thomas presided, assisted by Edward Bangs, Dr. Oliver Fiske, Thomas W. Ward and Levi Lincoln, Jr., as vice-presidents.

<sup>1</sup> Josiah Clark was graduated from Williams in 1809, and in the same year became the English preceptor at Leicester Academy. He was its principal from 1812 to March, 1818, when he was settled over the Congregational church in Rutland.

[Born, Northampton, Mass., 7 March, 1785. Died, Rutland, Mass., 11, July, 1845]

23. Circus opened—the Riders arrived.<sup>1</sup>
24. Having written a new will I published and declared it, &c. this day. A Lyon, Tyger and other wild animals Exhibited in Worcester. Dr. Bancroft returned from Vermont.
27. Went to Church twice.
28. Went to the Circus—most of the Ladies & Gentlemen were present—as was my grand daughter Mary Rebecca—It was West's Company—the performance very good.
31. Went to Boston in the Coachee—dined at Eaton's.

August, 1817.

2. Walked over to Charlestown.
3. Returned to Worcester accompanied by my daughter in law—dined at Weston's. Arrived at 4 °Clock. Hired Mr. Wm. Jemison for a few months to take care of my book stock.

<sup>1</sup> This was West's circus of performing horses, which was advertised to open on Mechanic street near the South Meeting House, "under the patronage of THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, who honoured the Performance with his presence at MR. WEST'S Circus, Charlestown, near Boston, on Thursday the 3d of July, 1817." In addition to feats of horsemanship, there was tight and slack rope dancing by Mr. and Mrs. Williams. The price of boxes for the performance was one dollar, and admission to the pit was fifty cents. This was the first circus to be exhibited in Worcester.

6. M<sup>r</sup>. William Jennison<sup>1</sup> arrived in the Stage from Boston.

8. Breakfasted at Fitzwilliam—after the Rain went on to Walpole—arrived at 4 °Clock, afternoon.

9. Had an interview with Whipple.

10. Went  $\frac{1}{2}$  day to Chh. in Walpole. Went down to the River—crossed over the Bridge to Vermont. Got the Keeper of the toll gate to Shave me.

11. Began the disagreeable settlement with Whipple with 3 of his own friends—none of my own present.

12-13-14. Engaged in the same business finished, and they awarded me 1450 dollars, fully convinced were they of the dishonesty of Whipple & his infamous conduct towards me. Sat out for Worcester in the afternoon—got as far as Troy, N. H. with Mr. Knight—Left Mr. Jennison at Walpole. Anne L. Sheldon returned to Smithfield.

15 Reached home—having rode 50 miles in the carriage after 8 °Clock in the morning.

17. Mr. Allen of Northboro' preached—went to Church twice.

20. Mrs. Peasé and Bragg went to Shrewsbury in the Chaise.

22. Went to Boston, in the Coachee with my son's wife and my Grand daughter Mary Rebecca. Went the old north road to Watertown and then through Brookline & Roxbury. Dined at Sudbury Cause way.

<sup>1</sup> William Jennison, the son of Samuel and Sally Fiske Jennison of Brookfield, Mass., was for many years an assistant in the office of the Clerk of the Courts for Worcester county. He married, 22 August, 1825, Mary Lynde, daughter of Theophilus and Elizabeth Lynde Wheeler, of Worcester.

[Born, Brookfield, 10 January, 1790.

Died, Worcester, 27 August, 1866.]

24. Rain most of the day. Did not go to Church. Dined with E. T. Andrews.

25. Rode in the Carriage to Jamaica Plains.

26. Rode to Cambridge & to Gen. Hull's in Newton. Saw Frazer. She came to Boston in the afternoon. In the afternoon went to Dorchester with M<sup>r</sup>. E. T. Andrews in his Carriage.

27. Attended Commencement at Cambridge. My Grand daughter Mary Rebecca went with me in our carriage. Was 6 $\frac{1}{4}$  hours in the meeting house. Dined in Dr. Bancroft's son George's rooms. Visited M<sup>r</sup>. Step<sup>n</sup>. Salisbury's son's room<sup>1</sup>—large Company. Paid my respects to the Governour, Lieut. Gov<sup>r</sup>., President of the University, several of the Council, &c. Returned to Boston with my Grand daughter, Miss Eliza Bancroft & Mr. Merrick in our Carriage.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> George Bancroft's Commencement part was an English oration "On the dignity and utility of the philosophy of the Human mind." Another part was a conference "On the influence of the peace upon the condition of the agriculturist, the manufacturer, the merchant, and the professional man," by Moses Kelly Emerson, John Orne Green, Samuel Hart and Stephen Salisbury. The salutatory oration was delivered in Latin, by Caleb Cushing.

"It is our duty to remark" said the Columbian Centinel, "that the mass of the performances was calculated to add to the already exalted reputation of this ancient and growing seminary. The improvement in elocution and style, as well as in profound learning, and useful science, were particularly noticed. There was less wit and humor in the performances—and of course less boisterous applause—than we have heard on former occasions; but the qualification of the learned and the judicious—an object of much more importance—was conspicuous in their silent attention, and in the smiles which lit up the countenance of a crowded auditory of both sexes. Hearty plaudits, however, were not withheld from many of the parts particularly the oration, on 'the dignity and utility of the philosophy of the mind'—the other English oration and some of the forensics."

Rev. Dr. John Pierce, of Brookline, in his notes on the Harvard Commencements, Mass. Hist. Soc. Pro., (Second Series, v. 167) writes of the exercises:—"The day was fine. The exercises commenced precisely at 10 A. M. . . . Bancroft's oration on the philosophy of the human mind did him great honour. . . . Large entertainments were given by Winthrop, Coolidge and Salisbury. The latter invited my family."

George Bancroft also received in his senior year, a second Bowdoin prize for a dissertation on "The use and necessity of Revelation"

28. Returned to Worcester, accompanied by Miss Hannah Weld.

31. Went to Church twice.

14. Went to Church twice. Mr. Willington<sup>1</sup> of Templeton preached. Made Fires in both parlors.

15. M<sup>r</sup>. Andrews, his wife and Miss Hannah Weld returned to Boston—Judge Bangs went to Portland.

18. Rode to the Bridge over the Long Pond—The Workmen supposed they had finished it two months ago, and I then passed over it in the Carriage—it has ever since been sinking, and giving way, especially at the East end, and is now impassable, although the workmen have been continually employed in raising it with timber, Earth & Stones, it sinks and gives way faster than they can raise it.

19. As I feared so it has happened—the Bridge mentioned above gave way this morning, and the whole entirely destroyed. 50 men were employed all summer in building it, and has cost the proprietors about 10,000 dollars—my loss will not be less than 500 dollars. The plan of the bridge was a bad one. I was opposed to it, from the beginning believing it would not stand. The bridge preceding it was a floating one, but badly constructed. A good floating bridge for this place I think will be the best we can have.<sup>1</sup>

A number of Gentlemen met to consult on the expediency of making a Dinner for the Governor, on the 2<sup>d</sup> of next month, he being then expected to pass thro' town from reviewing a brigade of militia at Oxford on his way to review a brigade at Lancaster. I was Chairman of the meeting and Chairman of the Comm<sup>ee</sup>. chosen to take the matter into Consideration, &c. Miss Lynde spent the Even<sup>g</sup>. with us. Dr. Bancroft returned from Maine.

20. Training.

22. Committee, &c. for providing a dinner to be given the Governor, met, reported, &c. Com<sup>ee</sup>. of Arrangements chosen—I was chosen Chairman.

23. Received 12 boxes of books from Walpole for which I paid Forty eight dollars at 6/ per Cwt. Met twice with the Com<sup>ee</sup>. of Arrangements, respecting a dinner for the Governor. Supreme Court in session in this Town.

25. One Sibley of Millbury tried for the murder of a woman, but acquitted on account of supposed derangement. Went to Providence to see my old friend M<sup>r</sup>. William Goddard, now 77 years of age, and very infirm. Lodged at his house. My man, carriage and horses I sent to the hotel. Called on Miss Sheldon.

26. Visited several gentlemen of my acquaintance in Providence. Had several invitations to dine. Drank tea with Wm. Wilkinson, Esq.

<sup>1</sup> There is a tradition that a number of Worcester men drove to the tavern, which stood near the causeway, on the Shrewsbury side of the lake, to celebrate the completion of the bridge with a dinner. When they came out of the tavern, the bridge had disappeared, and they were obliged to return by the old road.

27. Returned to Worcester. Called again on Miss Anne L. Sheldon as I passed through Smithfield.

28. Went to Church twice.

29. Attended the Com<sup>tee</sup>. for the public Dinner for the Governour.

October, 1817.

1. The Governor and his suite arrived in town from Oxford, where he had been to review a brigade. Waited on the Gov<sup>r</sup>. at Sike's Inn.

<sup>1</sup> Jeremiah Robinson, for many years an apothecary and druggist in Worcester, served his apprenticeship with Dr. Elijah Dix, with whom he was afterwards in partnership, until the latter's retirement from business, in 1807. His house and store were in the building south of the Dix house, at the head of School street. The latter part of his life was spent with one of his children, in Boston.

Mr. Robinson married, 17 November, 1791, Mary, daughter of George and Catharine Stevens, of Worcester.

[Born, Oakham, Mass, 1764.

Died, Boston, Mass., 7 September, 1849.]

<sup>2</sup> Nathan Heard, the son of Nathan and Anna Heard, succeeded his father as the keeper of the jail and jail tavern at Lincoln Square, in 1812, and held this position until his resignation in 1822. In 1823 he engaged in business as a dealer in West India goods and general merchandize at the old "Green Store," where he was in partnership successively with William Manning, Jr., James Estabrook and George M. Rice. He was afterwards in the Boston Custom House for several years. General Heard was always active in the militia, rising through the different grades to the rank of major-general; and was the second lieutenant of the Worcester Artillery Company, which marched to the defense of Boston, in 1814. He was chief engineer of the Worcester Fire Department from its organization in 1835 to 1840; and represented Worcester in the General Court from 1837 to 1839.

General Heard married Ruth Hollis of Braintree, Mass., who died a few years later; and 24 March, 1819 he married her niece Rachel, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary White, of Braintree.

[Born, Worcester, 25 March, 1790.

Died, Worcester, 9 September, 1878.]

American Political Society, an organization formed by the Whigs of Worcester, in December, 1773, to control the affairs of the town, and especially the actions of the Loyalist party; and was one of the committee of inspection appointed by the society, in 1774, to examine the merchants and traders of the town at intervals, to prevent the sale of imported goods, contrary to its "solemn league and covenant." He was ensign in Captain Benjamin Flagg's company, which marched to Lexington, 19 April, 1775. Colonel Lovell represented Worcester in the General Court in 1777, and was a selectman in 1778, 1779 and 1784.

<sup>1</sup> At the beginning of the nineteenth century there was no hospital in Boston for the treatment of general disease, though such institutions were already established in New York and Philadelphia. A bequest of five thousand dollars under the will of William Phillips, in 1804, was the real beginning of such an enterprize; but it was not until the summer of 1810 that active measures were taken to supply its want. 20 August of that year Dr. James Jackson and Dr. John Collins Warren issued a circular letter addressed to some of the most influential citizens of Boston and its neighborhood, asking for subscriptions for "a hospital for the reception of lunatics and other sick persons."

As a result of this letter, 25 February, 1811, fifty-six men were incorporated under the name of the "Massachusetts General Hospital." The charter granted to it, in addition, the fee simple of the old "Province House," upon the condition that one hundred thousand dollars should be subscribed by individuals within ten years. It was also helped in various other ways by the state. By a special resolve of the General Court, in 1817, the stone for the building was hammered by the convicts of the State Prison, in Charleston. Later, the charters of the Massachusetts Hospital Life Insurance Company, in 1818; of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, in 1835; of the State Mutual Life Assurance Company, of Worcester, in 1844; and of the Bowditch Mutual Life Insurance Company, in 1845, required that they should pay one third of their net profits to the hospital.

At their first meeting, 23 February, 1813, the trustees ordered the publication of an address to the public, accompanied by a circular letter to every clergyman in the Commonwealth. The response to this appeal was so generous, that in 1816, the trustees were enabled to buy an estate in Charlestown, (now Somerville) and to build two brick houses, which was ready for the reception of the insane, in 1818. This was the beginning of the McLean Asylum, a branch of the Massachusetts General Hospital, and named for one of its greatest benefactors, John McLean.

In November, 1817, a second circular letter was sent to the clergymen, to be read from their pulpits. Contributions were taken in the churches, and the amount received from these and from private gifts, authorized the immediate erection of the hospital. The site selected for it was what was formerly known as "Prince's pasture," at the west end of McLean street. The main building, designed by Charles Bulfinch, was first opened to patients in 1821, and at that time was considered the finest building in New England.

5. Fire Society annual Meeting. Meet at Sikes's. Supped there. Was chosen Chairman. I was one of the first members of this Society, which was instituted 25 years ago. Mrs. Seaver ended her Visit and went home. She has been with us a week. Mrs. Thomas, visited at L. Lincoln, jun<sup>rs</sup>. The Town agree to purchase Jennison's Farm for 5500 dollars, on which to provide for its Poor. It is  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles from the Street, or rather the Court house.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Thomas, by his will, left a bequest to the hospital which amounted to more than five thousand dollars.

<sup>1</sup> Previous to 1817 the poor of the town were supported by contract with the highest bidder at public auction. Owing to the general equality in the condition of the people, in the early days of the settlement, there was little poverty, and the few who needed assistance were cared for by private charity. In 1757 the first tax (£5 4s) was appropriated for their support. In 1772 a small wooden workhouse was built on Front street; and in 1807 it was determined to build a brick almshouse, but after the land and materials were purchased, the plan was abandoned.

Notwithstanding the purchase of the Jennison farm at this time, Mr. Thomas made the following provision in his will, which was dated 13 November, 1820:—

"I Give and Devise to the Town of Worcester forever, two Lots of Land on Thomas Street, one on the north side of said Street, bounded as follows—southwardly by Thomas Street—eastwardly by the Back Street or Road (Summer street) so called—northwardly by land lately owned by Nathan Patch and since by Geer Terry—and westwardly by land formerly sold to one Shepard by me and now belonging to me. The other Lot, opposite to the last described Lot, having the same extent in front, and the northeast and northwest corners opposite to the southeast and southwest corners of that Lot; bounded, eastwardly, on the said Back Street or Road, southwardly on the late Daniel Heywood's land, westwardly on my own land, and northwardly on said Thomas Street. These Lots are given and devised on condition that the said Town, within three years after my decease, erect on one of them a Charity House facing the Street, the basement story of which shall be faced with hewn stones with at least two stories thereupon, permanently built of brick; and on the further condition, that said town pay annually to the Overseers of the Poor, twenty dollars, which sum shall be appropriated annually towards providing for the poor persons maintained by the town in said Charity House, on thanksgiving days, a good and liberal dinner suitable for the occasion; also on that day, half a pint of common but good wine for each person, or a reasonable quantity of such other liquors as any of them may prefer, that they may have the means of participating on the days aforesaid, like their more affluent neighbors in some of the essential good things of this life bestowed by a bountiful Providence, and be enabled to unite in grateful orisons for the peace and felicity of our Country. And if the whole of said sum of twenty dollars should not be necessary in any year for the purpose aforesaid, the residue may be laid out in the purchase of books for the children of poor parents, or otherwise appropriated for the benefit of the poor as the Overseers or Trustees of the Charity House shall think best. If not accepted by the Town of Worcester, for the purposes before mentioned in three years after my decease, I devise these Lots to my Grand Children Edward, Benjamin and Isaiah T. Simmons and their heirs, in equal shares to each Child."

By a codicil, dated 26 February, 1830, Mr. Thomas revoked this devise; and in its stead left to the town all the lots on Thomas street not otherwise devised or sold upon the same conditions. If these were not accepted, he gave the lot on the northerly corner of Thomas and Summer streets "to erect thereon a large and handsome brick School house, or Academy—(said lot is sufficiently large to build also thereon, a dwelling house for a stationary Schoolmaster, or Tutor.)" a course of Lectures on Geology the five ensuing weeks, or defer having them till next fall; also, whether they would have a course of Botanical Lectures from M<sup>r</sup>. Eaton the ensuing Summer. I was chosen to preside at this meeting. A Com<sup>ee</sup>. was chosen to obtain Subscribers to the two courses of Lectures, and to determine whether the Lectures on Geology shall commence now or in Autumn.

The latter bequest was accepted by the town, and "The Latin school for boys," the first brick school house in Worcester, was opened in 1832.

<sup>1</sup> Ebenezer Adams, the son of Ephraim and Rebecca Locke Adams, of New Ipswich, N. H., was graduated from Dartmouth in 1791. He was preceptor of Leicester Academy from 1792 to 1806; professor of mathematics at Philips Exeter Academy; professor of languages at Dartmouth in 1809 and 1810; and professor of mathematics and natural philosophy from 1810 until his retirement in 1833. Professor Adams married Alice, daughter of Dr. John Frink, of Rutland, Mass; and 17 May, 1807 he married Beulah, daughter of Dr. Timothy Minot, of Concord, Mass.

25. Went to Chh. twice.

26. My grand daughter Augusta went with M<sup>r</sup>. Merriek, in a Sleigh, to visit his relations in Brookfield.

27. Rode out.—Miss Sheldon came on a visit for several days. Augusta returned from Brookfield.

28. Bragg and Eliza Smith went to a frolic—without notice to the family—staid till one °Clock in the morning.

29. Mrs. Thomas dismissed Eliza Smith our Chamber maid. Miss Sheldon returned to Smithfield with M<sup>r</sup>. Buffum.

30. Had a small pillar, complete of the Doric order, erected in Rev. D<sup>r</sup>. Bancroft's Church for the baptismal font—it is placed close in front, outside, and in the centre of the Deacon's Seat.

February, 1818.

1. Mrs. Thomas had another of her fainting turns, and did not go to Church. Rev. Mr. Nash preached. Sacrament administered, and the new furniture for the Sacramental Table used for the first time. Went to Church twice.

2. Wrote to send to the Grand Lodge, some observations on the Report of the New Regulations.

3. Went to Boston in the Albany Line of Stages, on the old road through Marlborough—dined at Lovell's at Sudbury Causeway—7½ hours on our passage.

4. Attended Grand Lodge held in the Exchange Coffee house, this Evening. Went and returned in a hack.

5. Walked out—on business, most of this day. Mrs. Seaver came on a visit.

6. Dined with Mr. E. T. Andrews. Rev. M<sup>r</sup>. Jenks<sup>1</sup> spent the Evening with me.

<sup>1</sup>William Jenks was graduated from Harvard in 1797, and became a reader at Christ Church, Cambridge. He was the minister of the First Congregational Church in Bath, Me., from 1805 to 1818, during which time he served as chaplain in the War of 1812, and for three years as professor of the Oriental languages and literature at Bowdoin. In 1818 he returned to Boston, and inaugurated the first religious instruction for seamen, which developed into the Mariner's Church, and later into the City Missionary Society. Having organized a society and erected a church in Green street, he was its minister from 1826 to 1844, when the society united with the Garden Street Church to form the Messiah Church, over which he was settled until it was disbanded in 1846.

Dr. Jenks was more noted as an author than as a preacher. His principal pub-

He received the degree of D.D. from Bowdoin in 1825, and from Harvard in 1842; and that of LL. D. from the former college in 1862.

Dr. Jenks was the founder of the American Oriental Society; a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; and a member of the Massachusetts Historical and the New England Historic Genealogical Societies. He was elected a member of the American Antiquarian Society in February, 1813; was its corresponding secretary from 1812 to 1816; a councillor from 1820 to 1831; a member of the committee of publication from 1819 to 1833; and vice-president from 1853 to 1866. He delivered the anniversary address before the society in 1813, and again in 1863.

He married, in 1799, Betsey, daughter of Ezekiel Russell, of Boston.

[Born, Newton, Mass., 25 November, 1778. Died, Boston, 13 November, 1866.]

<sup>1</sup> Stephen Salisbury, the son of Stephen and Elizabeth Tuckerman Salisbury, prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and was graduated from Harvard in 1817. 27 October of that year, Samuel M. Burnside entered in his diary, "Mr. Stephen Salisbury commenced his studies in my office." He was admitted to the Worcester County Bar, of which he was the oldest member at the time of his death; but it is doubtful if he ever had any thought of the actual practise of his profession, as the care of his father's constantly increasing property, which in a few years descended to him, and the public and financial affairs in which he was interested, fully occupied his time.

Entering upon his active life at the time when Worcester was beginning to grow from a small country village into an important manufacturing and commercial centre, he took an active part in its progress, and contributed in a large measure to the development of its resources. He built the Court Mills at Lincoln square, for manufacturing purposes; the first wire mill for Ichabod Washburn, on Grove street, in 1834; several of the factory buildings on Union street; and was a director and large stockholder in various companies.

Mr. Salisbury never eared for public office, but served in many important legislative and municipal positions:—was selectman in 1839; a member of the first

Board of Aldermen, in 1848; representative to the General Court, in 1838 and 1839; state senator in 1846 and 1847; elector of President and Vice President in 1860 and 1872; a member of the first Board of Directors of the Free Public Library, and president of the board from 1863 to 1865, and from 1868 to 1872; director of the Worcester Bank from 1832 to 1884, and its president from 1845 to 1884; president of the Worcester County Institution for Savings, from 1845 to 1871; director of the Worcester and Nashua Railroad from its organization, in 1845, and president in 1850 and 1851; director of the Boston, Barre and Gardner Railroad; first president of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute; trustee of the State Lunatic Hospital, at Worcester, and of Leicester Academy; and president of the Worcester County Horticultural Society.

From 1871 to 1883 he was a member of the Board of Overseers of Harvard University; was a trustee of the Peabody Museum of Archaeology, for eighteen, and its treasurer for fifteen years; and a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society.

Mr. Salisbury was elected to the American Antiquarian Society in 1840; served on the Council from 1843; as vice-president in 1853; and as president from 1854 until his death.

A generous benefactor of many of these institutions, Mr. Salisbury gave most liberally to three in which he took an especial interest:—the American Antiquarian Society, the Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Harvard University. Always a great lover and student of the ancient languages, he made a donation to the library of the latter in 1858, "to be expended in the purchase of books in the Greek and Latin languages, and in books in other languages illustrating Greek and Latin books." In 1875, he received the degree of LL.D. from the University.

Mr. Salisbury was three times married;—7 November, 1833, to Rebekeh Scott, daughter of Aaron and Phila Dean, of Charlestown, N. H., who died 24 July, 1843, leaving one son Stephen; then to Nancy Hoard, widow of Captain George Lincoln, who died 4 September, 1852; and third, to Mary Grosvenor, widow of Edward Dillingham Bangs, who died 25 September, 1864.

<sup>1</sup> 2 November, 1795, a number of men met at Heywood's Tavern in Worcester, to form an association for the protection of their property against thieves; and at a meeting a week later Samuel Flagg was chosen secretary and treasurer; and Benjamin Heywood, Ephraim Mower, Captain Joshua Whitney, Colonel Phinehas Jones, Deacon John Chamberlain, John Barnard and Samuel Andrews, a standing committee. A set of rules was adopted, the preamble of which stated that "Whereas the practice of Stealing has become so prevalent of late, that it becomes Necessary for the well disposed to unite in the most effectual Measures of Protecting their property against those Hostile invasions, We the Subscribers do, therefore Associate ourselves together, for the purpose of More effectually recovering any property that may at any time be stolen from the members of this Society, and of Mutually aiding each other in bringing offenders to condign punishment, hereby engaging to comply with the following rules and regulations."

The entrance fee was six shillings, in addition to which each member was required to pay his proportion of any expense incurred in recovering property; and any member who refused to go in pursuit of thieves without a reasonable excuse, was not entitled to farther advantage from the society.

The original members were Isaiah Thomas, Asa Hamilton, Samuel Brooks, Samuel Brazer, Nathaniel Paine, Leonard Worcester, John Green, Jr., John Pierce, Joel How, Daniel Heywood, 2nd., Ebenezer Reed, Abel Heywood, Charles Stearns, Thaddeus Chapin, David Andrews, Daniel Heywood, John Barnard, Daniel Willington, Walter Tufts, Benjamin Heywood, Joshua Whitney, Ephraim Mower, Phinehas Jones, Jonathan Chamberlain, Samuel Flagg, Robert Smith, Asa Ward, Oliver Fiske and Daniel Goadling.

The next meeting was not held until 7, January, 1801, when the name of "The Society of Mutual Aid against Thieves" was adopted. 10 January, 1803, the first pursuing committee was chosen, the members of which were "to hold themselves in readiness, at the shortest notice, to pursue any thief or thieves who may have stolen any property from a member of this society."

The society is still in existence under the name of "The Worcester Association for Mutual Aid in Detecting Thieves."

<sup>1</sup>The Brown and Butman Tavern, more familiarly known as the "Hancock Arms Tavern," stood on the westerly side of Lincoln street, a few rods from Lincoln square. It was opened in 1745 or 1746 by Luke Brown, of Sudbury, who married a daughter of Judge William Jennison, of Worcester. After his death, in 1772, his son Luke became the landlord, and he, falling a victim of the smallpox four years later, was in turn succeeded by his son Samuel, who was its host until nearly the close of the century. He was followed by Benjamin Butman, senior, Joel Howe, William Chamberlain, Captain Simeon Duncan and others. During the revolutionary period the name was changed to the "Hancock Arms Tavern," or the "Sign of Governor Hancock," and the sign before the door bore the portrait of the Governor. Here were held the first meetings of the "American Political Society" a local whig organization which existed from December, 1773 to May 1776; and here was the headquarters for that party, while the "Kings Arms Tavern," on the site of the Lincoln House block, kept by Brown's brother-in-law, Thomas Sterne, was the headquarters of the tories. During the scenes of Shay's Rebellion many of the insurgents were quartered there.

The building was finally brought by Stephen Salisbury, and after remaining unoccupied for several years, was burned 23 December, 1824.

<sup>1</sup>Ethan Allen Greenwood, the son of Moses and Betsey Dunlap Greenwood, of Hubbardston, Mass., was graduated from Dartmouth in 1806. After practising law for a short time in his native town, he was for many years a successful portrait painter in Boston. In 1816 he occupied a studio on Tremont street, but two years later removed to 24 Marlborough (Washington) street.

In the spring of 1818 he obtained a charter for the "New England Museum," the shares of which were principally owned by Boston merchants. It was opened on the fourth of July of that year at 76 Court street and originally comprised the collection of Edward Savage, the artist and portrait painter, and the engraver of the Savage portrait of Washington, with whom Mr. Greenwood was for a time associated. Subsequently several smaller museums were added, including the "New Haven," the "Market," the so-called "Boston," the "Columbian" and the collection of the Linnaean Society. The whole occupied two large halls and other rooms in the block of buildings on Court street, between Cornhill and Brattle street. The enterprise eventually proved a failure and in 1828 Mr. Greenwood was obliged to assign his property. The museum was bought by the brothers Kimball, by whom it was rearranged and opened as the "Boston Museum," in a building on the site of the old Horticultural Hall.

Mr. Greenwood, retired to Hubbardston where he passed the remainder of his life.

His diary records the painting of Mr. Thomas' portrait, and also that of Isaiah Thomas, Jr., in the spring of 1818. Among his portraits of local interest are those of Rev. Joseph Sumner, of Shrewsbury, and of Rev. Peter Whitney, of Northborough.

Mr. Greenwood married Mrs. Caroline Warren, of Roxbury, Mass., 11 February, 1821, but had no children.

[Born, Hubbardston, 27 May, 1779.

Died, Hubbardston, 3 May, 1856.]

8. Incedon,<sup>1</sup> the celebrated Singer, with Brown and Taylor—from the English Theatres, performed in this town, this Evening, at Hathaway's Hall.

<sup>1</sup> Caleb Burbank, the son of Abijah and Mary Spring Burbank, was born in that part of Sutton, which is now known as Bramanville, Millbury, his father having come from Newbury, Mass., at some time previous to 1760, and settled on "Burbank Hill."

23. Maj<sup>r</sup>. Gen<sup>l</sup>. Crane<sup>1</sup>—Brig<sup>r</sup>. Gen<sup>l</sup>. Dearborne<sup>2</sup> & Lady—and Major Minot Thayer, called to see me. The

“that the erection of a paper mill in this county, would be of great public advantage, and if any person or persons will undertake the erection of such a mill, that it be recommended to the people of the county to encourage the undertaking by generous contributions and subscriptions.” Abijah Burbank responded to this appeal, although there is no evidence that any previous training had fitted him for such work. It was difficult to find skilled workmen at that time, but after months of labor he succeeded, in June, 1776, in producing a sample of ordinary, coarse paper—21 May, 1778, the Massachusetts Spy announced that “the Paper Manufactory at Sutton is now carried on to great perfection. The good people of this county are desired to be careful in saving their rags, as by that means the Paper maker will be enabled to supply them plentifully, with as good paper as can be made in the State;” and 11 June, Mr. Burbank advertised that he had secured a “Compleat Master of the art of Paper Making.” He built a two-vat mill at the outlet of Singletary Pond, for which the power was furnished by a breast wheel, twelve feet in diameter. The rags were cut by hand on a scythe or long knife, fixed in a post. This was the first paper mill in Worcester County, and the seventh in the Commonwealth including two in Maine, which was then a part of Massachusetts. The five men and ten or twelve girls whom he employed could produce, in a day of fifteen hours, about two hundred and fifty pounds of paper. The greater part of this product was used in Central Massachusetts, and in portions of Rhode Island and Connecticut, regular trips being made through these sections to distribute the paper and to collect rags. Mr. Burbank furnished the paper used for the publication of the “Massachusetts Spy,” and for Mr. Thomas’s business in Worcester, until the latter built his own mill at Quinsigamond.

Caleb Burbank, who had served his apprenticeship with his father, succeeded to the business in 1783; and gradually, under his management, the capacity of the mill was increased, and the quality of the paper was improved. In 1798 he and his brother Elijah bought the Thomas mill, and operated it in connection with their business in Sutton; but he withdrew from this in 1811. He carried on the manufacture of paper for over fifty years, and acquired a large fortune, all of which he lost in the financial crisis of 1836.

General Burbank early entered the militia, receiving his first commission as lieutenant, in 1790; and in 1813 he was commissioned major general of the seventh division. In 1818 charges of neglect of duty and unmilitary conduct were preferred against him, and in the court martial which followed, he was found guilty, cashiered and dismissed from the service.

He married, 25 May, 1785, Lucy, daughter of Asa and Sarah Goodell Waters, of Sutton, who died in 1823; and later he married Hannah, daughter of David Smith, of Rutland, Mass.

[Born, Sutton, Mass., 18 July, 1761. Died, Millbury, Mass., 9 December, 1849.]

<sup>1</sup>Pliny Merrick, the son of Pliny and Ruth C. Merrick, of Brookfield, Mass., was graduated from Harvard in 1814, studied law with Levi Lincoln, Jr., and after his admission to the bar in 1817, practised for short periods in Worcester, Charlton and Swanzev, and in Taunton from 1820 to 1824; the last year as the partner of Marcus Morton. He was prosecuting attorney for Worcester county from 1824 until the division of the state into districts in 1832, when Governor Lincoln appointed him attorney for the middle district, comprising the counties of Worcester and Norfolk. In 1843 he was appointed a justice of the Court of Common Pleas, but resigned in 1848 to accept the presidency of the Worcester and Nashua Railroad. Two years later he was reappointed to the same court, and in 1853 was promoted to the Supreme Bench, holding this position until ill health compelled his retirement in 1864.

Judge Merrick acquired a large practice, and his reputation as a criminal lawyer was not confined to his own state, but extended to the courts of Vermont, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. One of the most important trials in which he was retained was that of Dr. Webster for the murder of Dr. Parknian in which he was the senior counsel for the defense.

His time was entirely given to his profession, and with the exception of serving in both branches of the Legislature, he held no political office. He was greatly interested in increasing the facilities for the higher branches of education, and bequeathed to the City of Worcester a considerable sum for the furtherance of that object.

Judge Merrick was a member of the Board of Overseers of Harvard College from 1852 to 1855, and received the degree of LL. D., from that college in 1853.

He married, 23 May, 1821. Mary Rebecca, daughter of Isaiah Thomas, Jr., and Mary Weld Thomas.

<sup>1</sup>The Exchange Coffee House, in Congress square, which was opened in 1808, was intended to become the headquarters of the financial interests of Boston, which then, as now, centered around State street. It took two and one-half years to complete the building, at the cost of nearly half a million dollars and it was the object of great local pride as being the finest hotel in the country. But it was far in advance of the times, and was an unsuccessful speculation from the first, floated for a time by the issue of worthless bills by a Rhode Island bank and ruined many of the mechanics who were employed in its construction. It covered an irregular tract of ground, measuring nearly thirteen thousand square feet, and was seven stories in height. The Congress street front, one hundred and thirty-two feet in length, was ornamented with six marble Ionic pilasters, and was crowned with a Corinthian pediment. On the ground floor a great central area, or court, forty by seventy feet, extending eighty-three feet to the roof, was lighted by a dome, and was surrounded by porticos of twenty columns on each floor, from which opened the rooms of the hotel. This was intended for the merchants exchange, and was supplied with all the principal American and foreign newspapers, a marine register and a record of important current events. It was never used for the purpose for which it was intended, however, as the merchants, from force of long habit, preferred to transact their business standing on the street, even in stormy weather. Connected with this area was a large coffee room, while above, in the part of the house devoted to the hotel was a dining room capable of seating three hundred persons, a great ball room and a masonic hall.

Destroyed by fire 3 November, 1818, it was rebuilt in a less expensive manner, and was used for a tavern until 1853, when it was torn down, and the "City Exchange" was built upon its site. The Boston meetings of the American Antiquarian Society were held there from 1812 to 1818, and from 1821 to 1836.
